PREFACE

The Adwaita philosophy of India was a most magnificent achievement of Indian thought and it towers like a pyramid above all other philosophical schools which pale almost into insignificance before the dazzling brilliancy it sheds both on the practical and the metaphysical needs of The leader of this school was the great Sankarhumanity. âchâryya who accepted it as he found it floating among other schools of thought in the intellectual atmosphere of It was in no sense a school founded by him. credit lies in his successful attempt at systematization, development, elaboration and methodically philosophical treatment under which the doctrine appeared in what may be characterised as an altogether new garb in which he clothed it with a master's hand. A large part of its principles existed embedded in the hymns of the Rig-veda * and in the elaborate exigetical rules and injunctions Later on, the diverse theories of connected therewith. Buddhistic philosophy so obscured its principles that presence seemed at times hardly suspected, and its traces were almost lost sight of. It was mainly Sankaráchárvva who first discovered and then brought it out from its unmerited obscurity into the clear light of day, adding to it the lustre which has since gathered round it.

Of late, many volumes have been written and the system criticised by a large number of brilliant scholars,

^{*} We have shown this in our Third volume of the "Upanishader Upadesh."

nearly all of which have tended to fall into a groove—an undesirable state of things which cannot but demand serious and careful consideration on the part of those who are desirous of seeing the Adwaita philosophy preserve its original features untouched by such elements as are likely to prove inconsistent with its special lines of thought and reasoning. It is now clear to the scholars who take real interest in this system that the Adwaita philosophy has of late been presented before the learned world in forms which are different from the ideas of its original interpreters.

The main object of this book is to consider all the new forms in which this system has been sought to be presented and it has been the author's attempt to form an estimate of these with a view to finding out if they really come into a line with the original form in which Sankar-acharyya himself presented it. The time seems almost ripe when a clear note of warning should be sounded for all those who wish really to study the Adwaita system. They will have to utterly forget all preconceptions and pre-imbibed ideas and to approach this system of philosophy with an open and unbiassed mind which enables them to make for themselves a correct estimate of the positions adopted therein.

The author further attempts to bring forward, in brief but clear outlines, all the main issues which are generally discussed in the Adwaita system, and which have been unfavourably criticised in other quarters. For the student of philosophy, all the points raised here are absolutely necessary for a clear grasp and right comprehension of the Adwaita doctrine in its principal aspects. Information requisite for a deeper study of the original works on the subject has been brought together in this book. In dealing with the different topics, an endeavour has been made to discover the real teaching of Sankara. The author has not been unmindful of the imperious necessity which every teacher feels to guide, with a due measure of caution, the foot of the beginner through the naturally difficult track,

In this book an endeavour has been made at the very outset to furnish the student and the general reader with the right views about the teachings of Sankara on each of the topics treated herein, and to equip them with the help needed to reach a proper solution of the difficulties they are likely to experience when diving deeper into the subject, No pains have been spared to make the work a suitable introduction to the proper study of the originals, and the subject-matter has been arranged in such a way as to make the book an indispensable companion for any full understanding of Sankara's position. It presents also beginners an opportunity of making themselves familiar with antagonistic views on various points, and supplies them with reasons to combat those views, from Sankara's works. The whole of the book is expository and contains the essentials of Sankara's teaching in as simple a form as the subject-matter allows, no principles being left out which a student ought to keep in view in the systematic study of Sankara's original works.

The author's experience as a lecturer in the Indian branch of philosophy has convinced him of the necessity of help in the shape of a book like this for the student who may have drifted from the old moorings. It has been his special study to present the expositions as faithfully as possible in the lines adopted and pursued by Sankara himself, and with a view to establishing the various positions, the author has quoted innumerable extracts in the footnotes from Sankara's writings, in support of those opinions. In this respect all the commentaries of Sankara have been treated as of equal importance. For this purpose, the ten Upanishads he has commented upon have been laid under contribution as also his commentaries on the Brahma-Sutra and the Gita.

writings on the subject,—writings whose style, though admirably lucid and impressively attractive, is not always easy of comprehension on account of long polemics against his opponents, and considering also the difficulty in putting the most abstruse of the reasonings of Sankara in a foreign tongue, the readers, the author trusts, will look upon this work with a kind indulgence.

Suggestions for the improvement of the book from sympathetic critics and scholars will be most gratefully accepted.

Lastly, the author takes this opportunity to express a very deep debt of gratitude he owes to the Hon'ble Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee who almost from the beginning of the author's college career has always fostered his literary aspirations and has very liberally helped him. It is needless to say that but for such generous help from him, the desire that impelled the author to undertake this work would have been baffled.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

In the preparation of the second edition which was called for within a few months of the appearance of the work last year, the book has been minutely and carefully revised. A few mistakes have been detected and corrected. An effort has been made to re-think the entire subject and to throw some more light upon it. Those texts which demanded a larger measure of attention and those also to which ample justice could not be done when the book first saw the light, have in this edition received more adequate treatment and for this purpose considerable new matter has been added to the first three chapters in appropriate places of discussions and the authorities more extensively quoted at the footnotes in support of each position. To make the citations of the authoritative passages full 88 possible. all the commentaries of Sankara have been carefully read and re-read and the author hopes that his primary object to place in the hands of the philosophical student a complete and right exposition of the system of Sankara within the scope of a single volume has now been adequately realised. No pains have been spared to give a connected and complete view of the system of Sankara-Vedanta as that view appears from the writings of Sankara himself and to present his philosophy as he himself thought The material has been all drawn straight from the fountain-head, and the author ventures to hope that this fact has given to his work an abiding value and its usefulness has thus been greatly enhanced.

To get a fairly adequate and a correct idea of the essentials of the whole Vedanta doctrine which is admittedly a complicated one, it is necessary to master at least the ten or twelve big commentaries of Sankara which cannot but prove a formidable task to a student. And even then, without such aid as this book is intended to supply, to connect together the widely scattered utterances of Sankara and to arrange them under different topics the student will find his task a very hard one, if not impossible. And even if he is prepared to labour at the actual texts of Sankara, he will find many of his difficulties cleared up and his path smoothed, hitherto considered thorny, if he reads this book side by side with Sankara's own deductions and conclusions. It has therefore been the special aim of the author to state Sankara's essential thoughts as easily and methodically as possible.

The author avails himself of this opportunity to acknowledge a deep debt of gratitude which he owes to those savants of the East and particularly of the West who have given a warm reception to the book and furnished him with their valuable appreciation. The author also desires to return a grateful acknowledgment to the Board of Higher Studies in Philosophy composed of a body of those veteran scholars of philosophy presided over by that reputed Professor of Philosophy-Prof. S. Radhakrishnan, for selecting this work as a text book in philosophy for the M.A. students of the Calcutta University. It is gratifying to note that this recognition from such quarters amply shows that the interpretations which the book contains, though they may appear new, have the approval of the learned world. The author fervently hopes that the reading public will accord to this edition the same measure of sympathy which its predecessor gained.

Any suggestions for the improvement of the book in making it a more efficient help to the study of this difficult subject will be gratefully accepted.

AN INTRODUCTION TO ADWAITA PHILOSOPHY

CHAPTER I

ON BRAHMAN AS CREATOR

1. It is laid down in the Adwaita System of philosophy that the Prana-spandana—the universally Brahman reveals its nature to finite individual through his organism. diffused vibratory Prána is the revelation of Brahma's 'nature' which involved the creative activity of Brahman. From this Prána-Spandana or external nature (বিষয়), gradually, stages after stages, step by step, the human organisms with their external and internal elements (কাঠা-কাংম-ন্যান) have been built up, as the last stage of the process of manifestation. Had there been no such revelation of the 'nature' of Brahman, we could not know its real nature, and it would remain for ever an abstract and remote being. That Brahman is a self-conscious power (ম্মান্যনান্ত বর্ণ) would have remained shut up from our knowledge. Elsewhere, we find this fact stated still more distinctly. It is stated that in order to reveal, by degrees, what she contains in herself, nature has gradually assumed the form of human organs-external and internal; -so that she may, through these organs, reveal the infinite treasure she contains within her to the human selves. i The organs are merely the different phases of herself, which nature has assumed, and in which she is present herself. This description shows that the building up of the human organisms, or in other words, the evolution of the beings with their cognitive and active organs 2 through which the rational human beings become variously conscious of the external world and can act in diverse ways within it,—is the goal is the final fulfilment, to reach which nature strives. Thus, Brahman has manifested itself as external nature, with a view to reveal to the human beings its own immense and infinite riches through her. The organisms of the different grades of beings3 are but the differentiations-

There was the revelation of Brahman as the rarefied, universally diffused Prána-spandam or Sutra. It gradually became more and more integrated, and it differentiated into five classes of elements (पञ्चतमाच), which became, as the result of combination in different proportions, gross (खूलभूत) out of which the organisms were built up in accordance with the inner 'nature' or खूज्य of the individuals "इन्द्रियादीनां यत् खूज्यार्थ, तनु 'पाराय्यन' निमित्तभूतेन, चैतन्यात्मक्रतमेव "—गी° भा°, 13. 22).

- 1 "विषय-समान-जातीय' करण' मन्यते स्रुति:। विषयस्यैव खास्त्रगाहकलेन... खास्त्रविशेषप्रकाशकलेन संस्थानान्तराणि करणानि'' (\mathfrak{g}° भा $^\circ$, 2.4.11)।
- ² "विज्ञान-क्रियाणक्तिहयसं मूर्च्छितात्मा (जीव:)"—This is the Rational and moral self (क्वा° भा°, 8.12.3).
- 3 The Individuals are classified under four typical divisions— सेदन, पश्चन, उद्गिक and जरायुज। not separation—from the common environment universally existent. There are thus action and reaction always going on between the organisms and the particular portion of the environment-within which they are placed. As there is always a feeling-element which accompanies these reactions, the organised beings-particularly the human beings whose organs have been more highly developedcome to enjoy what is श्रीमत् (beauty), विभूतिमत् (grandeur) and जर्जितं (sublimity)1 in the external world; and as the human being actively arranges these feelings and rationally acts for the realisation of his own end,—this contact with the world reveals to him the important truth that he is a rationally active being. Thus we find that to furnish the human selves with their objects of knowledge and action in the shape of cognitive and active organs, manas, etc.—appears to be the purpose for which nature perpetually works, and this she does, because an eternal, inexhaustible Power (Brahman) is present behind her, which is realising its own Swarupa (ভাষ্য) gradually in higher and higher forms, through the successive stages of nature.2 Such creation is perpetually going on and it still continues.¹ The creation is described in the Vedanta, for this reason, as not an event in time done once for all;² but as an eternal act and its purpose has not yet ceased or been finished.³

2. Thus, Brahman is represented in the Vedanta in its two inseparable aspects—its fay u or Transcendental aspect and its under the sequence of Immanental aspect. As Brahman is revealed partially in the activities of Prána, it is Saguna (सगुष); and as it is present behind its activities as the infinite and inexhaustible source of these activities, it is Nirguna (निर्णेष)। The same fact is stated in another form. Brahman is both the Efficient cause (निमित्त कार्य) and Material cause (उपादान কাৰে) of the world.4 If one of these aspects be ignored. a serious defect will at once vitiate the theory. If you represent Brahman in its purely immanent character, the world would be invested with a false independence. and everything of the world would have to be accepted as it is. The world, in this case, would be an exhaustive expression of Brahman, and a self-sufficient, an independent, completed whole-all its steps being predetermined by its antecedent steps in time. The individuals also, being mere parts of this whole, would be like automatic machines, acting their parts as they are made to act. If, on the other hand, Brahman is represented in its purely transcendental character, it is absolutely separated from the world, and has no concern with any activities going on in the world. It would thus be a distant and remote being absolutely cut off from the changes,—an abstract, incomprehensible, extra-mundane being, exalted beyond all predicates (नित, नित).

Even among the friendly interpreters of Vedanta whose writings we have come across, there are many who have, unfortunately, thought of Nirguna (विश्व) Brahman in this light. They speak of Vedantic Nirguna Brahman as a "void—without consciousness, without activity,—a characterless nothing." It is something "abstract and remote and having no relation whatever with the world." "The Upanishads"—one of these writers declares—"reach their goal by the method of excluding all difference—the goal being pure undifferenced being; Sankara's doctrine is in this direction."

Everywhere Sankara has repeatedly declared Brahman to be—" श्रीभन्न-निमित्तीपादान-कारणम्";—
Brahman an Efficient and Material cause.

Brahman's transcendency and imma-nence are inseparable (प्राप्ति) aspects. Brahman is revealed in the world in the diversities of nama-rupa (नाम रूप), but yet it is present behind its manifestations in its own inexhaustible (पूर्च) nature. In the 1.4.25-27, (वें भा), Brahman is described as evolving from its own nature the changes or the emergent effects, itself being their prior cause, present behind each change:—

" पूर्व्वविज्ञोऽपि हि सन् भात्मा, विश्वेषेण विकारात्मना परिणमयामास भात्मानम्"।

It is its own Atmá, its own 'nature' or অব্য, which differentiated itself into the multiplicity of changes, but it retains, behind them, its own unity or identity which it does not lose in them.

In the Gitá-Bhásya, the world, i. e., the active common medium (প্রাথ-অন্থন) and the finite individuals—these two are called as the two Prakritis of God, and they are held to be eternal (দিল্ম). Sankara here remarks that unless the elements to be controlled by God are eternal, God the controller of these two would himself turn out to be non-eternal (মনিল্ম), and thus his 'God-hood' (ম্বার্ল) would fall to the ground. In the Vedanta-Bhásya, he calls ম্বার to be eternal (নিলম্বার্ক), in several places. The creative act of Brahman has also been declared as eternal (নিলম্বার্ক)—

" तस्य नित्य-सिद्धस्य द्वेश्वरस्य सृष्टि-स्थिति-सं द्विति-विषयं नित्यन्नानं भवतीति " (वे $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 1.1.5)

That is to say, "the idea, of creation and maintenance of everything in existence, is eternal in Brahman." These gradually-revealed náma-rupas (नाम-रापड) have also been declared to be the 'object' to which Brahman stands related as the 'subject.'—

" किं पुनस्तत् 'कर्मा' यत् प्रागुत्पत्ते रौश्वरज्ञानस्य 'विषयो 'भवतौति ? …नामरुपे ः स्याचिकौर्षिते इति ब्रमः " (वे° भा°, 1.1.5).

And कर्ता pervades its कर्यंs—the latter are taken up into the life of the former—not simply isolated. They are permeated by the action of कर्ता। altogether from the underlying Brahman, making it a "remote, difference-less being?"

In the face of such distinct and unmistakable expressions, how can the revealed differences (changes) be severed

3. In the commentaries of Sankara, the Náma-rupas

Brahman—not a solitary and remote being; but ever present behind its manifestations.

(नाम-रूपs)—the evolving and emerging changes—are always described as accompanied by the underlying causal Power, i. e., Brahman.

"Whenever and wherever the changes emerge, they can never emerge separated or detached from their underlying Atmá or Brahman"—

"यदा नाम-क्षे व्याक्रियेते, तदा नाम-क्षे भाक्षस्वक्पापरित्यागेनैव, ब्रह्मणाऽप्रविभक्त-देशकाले, सर्व्वाष्ट्रवस्थासु व्याक्रियेते"।
" न हि भाक्षमोऽन्यत्...तत्-प्रविभक्तदेशकालं...भूतं भवत् भविष्यदा वस्त विद्यते " (तै° भा°, 2.6.।

i. e., "Nothing can be there, separated from the Brahman's 'nature'—either in time or in space."

" चैतन्यात्र्यतिरेक्केणैव हि कला: जायमानासिष्ठन्य: प्रलीयमानाय सर्व्वदा लन्द्यन्ते " (प्र° भा°, 6.2)।

"When the mais, i. e., the emerging differences or changes are created, are maintained in existence, and then will merge in their final end—they do so not separated from the underlying chaitanya, i.e., the 'nature'— समय of the self"—

Again-

"All the emergent effects or changes are never severed from their underlying cause on which they stand. When they emerge and are sustained in existence after their emergence,—they are always grounded in the underlying sat (धत्) or the Causal Power'—

- " प्रजा: न नैवलं सन्मूला: एव, इदानीमपि स्थितिकाची सदायतना: सदायया एव " (का॰ भा॰, 6.8.4)।
- "Can ষ্ট, viz., a transformed state of হানিকা stand even for a moment, if severed or disconnected from clay, from the underlying হানিকা?—
- "यस च यसादात्मसाभी भवति, स तेन भविभक्तो दृष्टः, यथा घटादौनां सदा" (इ° भा°, 1.6.1) "what is produced by something remains inseparably connected with it; it cannot be separated out of it."

If such be the case; if under all circumstances, the emergent changes, the náma-rupas, are found to be accompanied by their underlying causal reality, and if this causal reality maintains its unity in the successive changes,—it follows that the underlying Brahman, which is the source of all these varieties of the evolving changes, can neverbe looked upon as purely transcendent and as unrelated to, and cut off from, these changes.

In the Vedanta, Brahman, as well as the finite individuals are held to have a 'nature'—a way, of their own. This 'nature' or way of Brahman or of the individual beings, is never, in the Bhasyas, regarded as a solitary nature standing alone on its own account, remote from, and unrelated to, the emerging states and activities produced from that nature. It is always looked upon as adhisthana (पिष्णा)¹ because it has a 'nature,' a 'character' of its own which sustains all.

4. It is indeed true that sometimes, the prior condition-- प्रागवस्था-- of the world, where Apparent cases of solitary character of Brahman and finite self-explained.

there were supposed to be no changes as vet created or emerged, has been described: and Brahman has also been described as standing alone, without a second, during that this apparently solitary being, viz., And Brahman has sometimes been likened, in the Bhásyas, to the individual self during its dream-less sleep (सवशावस्था) when all its states and activities disappear in the self, and the self thus stands alone, as it were, at that time. Now, it may be asked, what explanation can be suggested to clear off this situation. Apparently this is a condition described in the Sankara-Bhásya, where the pure transcendence of the self or of Brahman—cut off from all relations with the world-seems to be made quite evident.

OUR ANSWER TO THIS ENQUIRY IS TWO-FOLD:-

(i) Firstly: When the dream-less state of the finite self is described, it will be seen that the self is not actually solitary or alone even during this condition. Sankara tells us that the self is not an 'empty subject' even then. The subject has for its 'object,' during that the presence and operation of the Prana condition. (प्राचार्यक्ति)। When the action of the external environment upon our sense-organs ceases to operate, during the time when we fall asleep, there are no functions of the organs excited. In the absence of these, our mind (manas) also ceases to act. Necessarily, all Prána-sakti-never the external and internal functions, absent from the finite self andsays Sankara, merge in the Pranasource of all kinds of activities of the human the organism.¹ All activities lie latent in the Prána now. This latent দাৰ্থালি, though its functions as differentiated in time and space-orders have ceased, is actually present within the organism, as is evidenced by the heat of the body and the other actions during our dream-less sleep. The self is not solitary and alone even now. It controls the Prána-sakti ("দাৰ্থান্ত্ৰ"). When we again wake up, all the latent activities of this Prána will again go on, as before, as soon as they are elicited from the Prána by the actions of the external environment upon our sense-organs. This emergence again of these activities proves the presence of the Prána within our organism during our sleep.²

Similar is the condition of Brahman when the varieties of the changes of Náma-rupa (नाम-इप) are merged in the universally existent prána-spandana or sutra (vibranever absent from Brahman also. tory tremor of the diffuse Prána); and this Prána is the source of all subsequently developed activities emerging after the creation. It appears therefore that this Prána-sakti or the नाम-इप-मिन was existent in Brahman during the मागनस्था, i.e., at the time of first manifestation (after the last pralaya). Thus we find that Brahman was not alone or solitary even then. Sankara took sufficient care to observe—

" प्रात्मस्ये पनभिन्यते नाम-वपे "।--- i.e., the नाम-द्य—the root-cause of all differentiations existed in Brahman; and it was an 'object' in relation to

¹ " देहे चेटात्मक-जीवनहेतुलं प्राणस्मेति 'बायुइ-निर्हें शः '' (वे° भा°, रवप्रभा)।

[&]quot; मनन-दर्शनात्मकानां चलनात्मकानाञ्च 'क्रियासामान्यमावे ' प्रायेऽन्तर्भाव: " (ड° भा°)। "दर्शन-श्रवये एव हि मन:-स्पन्दिते, तदभावे इद्येव स्वविश्वेषेण प्रायात्मना स्वव्यानं...वीजात्मकल मपरित्युक्येव प्रायाश्वस्त्वं सतः" (मा°का°भाष्य १)। which Brahman was described as its 'subject.' Brahman was, therefore, not alone and solitary and object-less, even then. To show the presence of this Prána-sakti in Brahman, the Katha-bhásya thus expresses the idea:—

"As in an almost imperceptible tiny seed of a Fig-tree, its final end, viz., the immense and gigantic tree itself is existent as a future-power (বীলম্বলি); so in the 'nature' of Brahman is interwoven the subsequently developed world with all its varieties, as a latent future power. Otherwise, the changes or differences are to be imagined to have been produced out of nothing (ম্বন)."

" श्रन्यक्तं सर्व्वस्य जगतो वीजभूतं श्रन्याक्षत-नाम-रूपसतत्त्वं सर्व्वकार्यः-करण-यक्ति-समाञ्चार-रूपं \dots प्रमारमिन श्रोतप्रोत-भावेन समाश्चितं, वटकणिकायामिव वटवीज-यक्तिः" (कठ $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 3. 11) ।

In the Chándogya-Bhásya also, the presence of this náma-rupa (नाम-चप) in Brahman and its control by Brahman are beautifully expressed thus—

- "Brahman is distinguished from the nama-rupa contained within it, and untouched by it, but yet it controls its activities"—
- "ते नाम-इत्ये ...यस्य ब्रह्मणी मध्ये वर्त्तेते.....यत्...नामक्पाध्यामस्पृष्टंनाम-इत्य-विलचणं ...तथापि तयीर्निव्योद् एवं लचणं ब्रह्म" (क्वा° भा°, 8.14.1)।

 $^{^1}$ " इदमेव जगत् प्रागवस्थायां...वीजशस्त्रवस्यं श्रव्यक्तशस्त्रयोग्यं" (के भा $^\circ$, 1.4.2)। "प्रस्तये सर्स्वकार्य्यकरणश्कतीनां मवस्थानमस्युपगन्तव्यं, श्रक्तिस्त्वचास्य नित्यस्तिनिक्वीहाय" (क σ भा $^\circ$, शा $^\circ$ गिरि)। 'प्राण-चेष्टा '—is a distinguishing property of a चेतन (वे σ भा $^\circ$, 3.3.53)।

Exactly similar observations occur in the Vedanta-Bhásya also. We find then that Brahman has nowhere been really described as a solitary being without anything for it to control, i.e., as 'object-less' or difference-less 'subject.'

(ii) We shall now come to our second answer-

The individual self, according to Sankara, has a distinct 'nature' or सुद्य of its own, and this सद्य cannot be resolved into its states and activities evoked from it through its interaction with the external environment. This nature or खद्द maintains its unity or identity in all its evolved changes or states. Brahman too, in this system of philosophy, has a distinct 'nature' or खभाव of its own, and this म्बभाव maintains its unity, as distinguished from the infinite varieties of the changes of náma-rupa (नाम-६प)—ever evolving from this स्वभाव.2 The importance of this truth cannot be too highly emphasised. Most people are liable to resolve this unity into the visible multiplicity of the changing states, and to take the aggregate of the states to be the only self. It is therefore necessary to impress the mind of the seekers of truth with this great principle, so that the people may not forget this was of their own, as well as of Brahman itself,—as underlying all the diversities of the changes.

During our dreaming and waking states, our real 'nature' or अद्भ becomes utterly obscured by our waking and dreaming experiences, as the case may be. The sum-total of these experiences appears to us to be the only self. It is most difficult to distinguish the presence and operation of our true self which underlies these experiences, unaffected by them. 1 It is needful therefore to choose a condition where, if possible, these varieties of experiences, do not appear to disturb the 'nature' of the self. Our dreamless sleep is the right condition, when all the outward and inward There the true underlying distractions seem to cease. self, unaffected by the experiences, comes distinctly into the view. For this very reason, the dream-less condition (सुब्रावस्था) has been taken to be the स्वरुपावस्था, i.e., the true condition where the real 'nature' (सहप) of the self is to be discovered. It is not really meant to show that the self is actually solitary or object-less.2

In a similar way, the pre-existing state—(प्रागवस्था)—of the world has been chosen to exhibit the true unaffected 'nature' or खर्ष of Brahman which underlies the world, i.e., its emerging changes or विकारs, and which is thus distinguished from them. The chance becomes infinitely harder to detect the presence of this 'nature' unaffected by the changes, when the diversities of nama-rupa (नामस्प) perpetually work, as at present. The सुष्तावस्प of the individual self and the प्रागवस्था of the world both help us in easily detect-

Prior state of world and susupta state of finite self—meant to show the 'nature' of Brahman and self respectively. ing the presence of the 'nature' or equ of both the individual self and Brahman respectively, and in becoming convinced of a unity amidst diversity. It has been thought advisable, on account of this very difficulty, to select or rather to imagine a condition of the world when the changes as yet did not appear to emerge, but just on the point of emerging into the view. This condition is named as Prâgabasthá (प्रागवस्था) of the world. It would be far easier to grasp the undisturbed true nature (ৰহব) of Brahman in the absence of any emerging changes or विकारs. During the प्रागव ह्या, there is no possibility to resolve the nature of Brahman into, and to identify it with, the empirical changes-taking the aggregate of these changes to be the only reality. It is for this that we find the प्रागवस्था (Prágabasthá) of the world described in the commentaries of Sankara. Its real purpose is not to show that there can ever be a state when Brahman can exist without any differences, as a solitary being selfsufficient without the created world—an object-less subject. To imply this fact, the náma-rupa (नाम-इप) has been expressly stated, in the beginning of the Vedanta-bhásya, as the 'विषय' or the 'object' of Brahman—the 'subject.'1

is therefore an erroneous attempt to interpret Brahman as 'object-less,' as Dr. Paul Deussen has done in his Philosophy of the Upanishads. This Prior state or unagen has been chosen to show that Brahman has a 'nature' of its own and this nature must be existent prior to its manifestations and that Brahman is not an 'abstraction.'

That Brahman in its own character is invariably to be

Illustration of the above fact from Sankara-bhásya found present behind all the changes of the world and that the latter can never exist without the underlying Brahman—is everywhere repeatedly shown in the commentaries of Sankara. How carefully and beautifully the above fact is stated will appear from the following passages which we have selected with a view to support what has been stated in the preceding page.

In the Mándukya-bhásya, in describing the nature of the Transcendental (রুখিয়) Brahman, Sankara states—

(i) If, it may be asked, Brahman is to be taken as something which lies beyond what has been manifested in the world; if it be apart from all changes, all states, all actions which are visible in the empirical world;—then it necessarily follows that no speech, no language, no word can describe its nature; in as much as the speech, the word and the language are included in the manifested things of the world. Then go a step further. That which cannot be expressed by a word; to which no thoughts-no words can be applied; --we may very well take that to be a non-entity, a mere void (মুখ). Raising this objection, Sankara thus meets it :- 'No, Brahman is not a void, never a non-entity. Brahman always underlies the changes and sustains them. All manifestations come from that underlying sustaining ground. The ground which gives support to these changes and constantly sustains them cannot prove to be a mere void or nonentity.

It must have a positive nature of its own. Even when a snake, a silver, a mirage appears to arise,—all these appearances are invariably found to be supported, in each case, by a sustaining ground upon which they appear, viz., a rope, an oyster, and the surface of a desert; unsupported by which, these appearances cannot for a moment stand. Hence the Brahman's 'nature' is the sustaining ground of all changes, all manifestations,—in the absence of which the latter cannot stand, cannot live. If the sustaining ground is held to be a non-entity,—nothing; then, can mere 'nothing' give birth to the positive things of the world?

(ii) Our life begins with our experiences. These experiences are of two kinds. Those which we experience in our waking state and those which are experienced in our dream. All our experiences are various, successive, and they change their aspects always. But underlying these changing experiences and unaffected by them, there is our true self which experiences them as they arise. This self is the sustaining ground of all our experiences, in the absence of which the latter cannot stand and operate. The experiences are, as noted above, successive, multiple in their nature and transitory. But the underlying self which lives in them and sustains them is a unity and it maintains its identity unaffected by these changing experiences. Our self is in touch with the transcendental (atta) Brahman, which is our real self.

There is no other way left to us to comprehend the nature of the self, except as the sustaining ground of our experiences, through which that nature realises or expresses itself. It cannot be a non-entity.

No further quotation is necessary. These will suffice to prove the position of Sankara. From what has been stated above, it is evident that Brahman is regarded in the Vedanta, as perpetually present and operative, as an inexhaustible source, behind the changes or transformations evolving from it. It is thus intimately related to the nāma-rūpas, the fatus or changes, as their ever-present ground and controller. It is therefore impossible to regard Brahman as remote and solitary and as an 'abstract void.' And as the creation is perpetually going on—and newer and newer differences are emerging continuously, " उत्तरोत्तर-सर्व्वकार्येषु " (गी

how can these be separated from Brahman, making Brahman a difference-less abstract?

5. The conclusions we have drawn above will appear more clearly if we show how in the Sankara-Vedanta the production of this world, of nāma-rūpas, from the Nirgun Brahman, and the relation subsisting between them have been described. The observations made by Sankara in this connection are of immense value for a clear comprehension of the Máyá-theory of Sankara. We have therefore thought fit to elaborate the idea of Sankara in these respects here.

^{&#}x27; ' जायदादिस्थानेषु एक एवायमात्मा इत्यव्यभिचारी यः प्रत्ययः, तेन चनुसरणी यं ... तुरीयं ब्रह्म ।... निर्व्धिषेषे एव चात्मनि सुखिलादि-विश्वेषाः कल्पिताः । चात्मा एतेषु चनुगतः, सर्व्यव चव्यभिचारात् '' (मा° भा°, 1.7) । ''वाबस्थायैव चात्मनः तरीवलेन प्रतिपिपाद्यिषितलात्''।

(1) In an important passage occurring in the Bhásya on the Taittiriya Upanishad, Brah-Being (सत्) and man is defined as Sámánya (सामान्य)— i.e., as the universal.

सामान्यं हि ब्रह्म।

भपोदसर्व्वविश्ववतात्...सर्वसामान्यवाच ब्रह्मण: (तै°:भा°, 2.6.)

This universal, this Sámánya is the idea of Being in general, pure being—सन्। It is obtained by abstracting from all specific determinations (विशेष) whatever. We are to think its Being which it has in common with every other object of the world (सक्षेत्रामान्यलात)। This being has no specific determinations, for we have abstracted from all determinations (भगेदसकेविशेषलात)। As it is the absence of everything of all determinations, it is undetermined. Apart from its Being, its "isness" (यना), it has no character. It is pure "is," without any further determinations. This being, this "isness," cannot be removed; for in that case, Sankara points out, it would be pure nothing, it would lose its nature altogether. 1

But a doubt may arise that what is devoid of all determinations is merely a non-existent thing—

तस्मात् विभेषतीऽयस्यात् नासीति ?—(तै° भा°, 2.6.)

Sankara resolves this doubt by remarking that as Brahman is the Cause (कारण), it cannot be said to be non-existent. In the 'Vedanta,' Brahman, the Universal, the

Being—is held to be the Cause of the world. It has no other cause beyond it, is its own cause. And as a cause, it is not determined by something else (प्रा); but it determines itself; the whole of its determinations rises out of its own resources. Hence it is not undetermined, it is self-determined. All determinations can therefore be removed, excepting "isness"; for, Brahman being the Cause of the Universe, this cause underlies hidden behind this universe.

Now, as Brahman is held to be the cause of the universe, the universe is produced out of it. It is a fixed tenet of the Vedanta that prior to their production, the effects (কাঠাs), the náma-rūpas—existed in the cause. But in what form the effects, the differences of Náma-rūpa, existed in Brahman? Did the actual diversities of Nāma-rūpa, the actual determinations (বিম্বাত্ত) exist in the cause? No; there was not yet any differentiation, there was as yet no separation of náma-rūpa into space and time. Within the Being (धर्), no differences have yet disclosed themselves (ध्वाक्षित्रको नामक्षे)। There was nothing to distinguish the जान from Brahman in that stage. Differentiations were all implicit, hidden

The जगत् existing in Brahman prior to its manifestation is called in भा° आ° as प्राचानिक or बीजवाकि । Sankara here says that the qualitative in चत्; differentiations were all inseparably, indistinguishably, blended in Brahman. Sankara has very beautifully described this condition by illustrations—

—-प्रञ्च° भा°. 4.1.

But, it may be asked, if there were, in that stage, no differentiations of Náma-rūpa, if there were no specific determinations yet appearing in the सर, if जात could not be separated from Brahman, if there was nothing to distinguish náma-rūpas from Brahman,—may not the universe be called non-existent in that condition? How do you know that náma-rūpa, जात—existed in Brahman? In fact, there are passages in the जुति itself where the universe, prior to its production, is called as जात—non-existent.—

पसदासीत्तत: सदजायत । (तै॰ उप॰, 2.7.)

How do you know then that जगत् existed in the Being?

differences exist blended in Brahman; otherwise the differences could not issue from it afterwards. ज्ञानन्दगिर remarks here—"सर्वेद्धः कार्यप्रपञ्चर्यः एकसूर्तितं न वास्तवं, पुनर्शयापूर्वं विभागायोग्यतात" (मा° भा°, ज्ञाग प्र°, 5) In वेदा° भाष्य, 2.1.9, this वीजशक्ति is called ज्ञानप्रतिवज्ञा विभागशक्ति (Power of potential distinction). This is माया, the potential distinction hidden in Brahman. It is objective, not merely subjective.

Sankara furnishes us with the requisite reply to this question. First of all he points out that it is not in the sense of absolute non-existence of the जगत, that the term प्रमुत् is used in the Sruti. The statement simply means that there were no differentiations developed as yet, no specific determinations, no actual manifestations. The term चसत्, therefore, does not mean absolute non-being. Nonbeing here only means the absence of specific determinations. It only means that the determinations were implicit, hidden, not yet manifested or developed.1 follows therefore that the Being and non-being, eq and चसत, ब्रह्म and जगत-were identical in that condition,2 and therefore indistinguishably blended. On account of the identity of the Being and non-being, Brahman is called in the Vedanta-bhasya as- असदिव, and जगत also is called in the Chandogya-bhásya as सत् and in the Taittiriya-bhasya as भात्मा 3—in that stage.

- ¹ श्वसदिति व्याक्ततनामक्पविशेष'विपरीत'मिवक्ततं ब्रह्म उच्चते ; न पुनरत्यन्तमेव श्वसत्'—ते॰ भा॰, 2.7, "न द्यायमत्यनामस्वाभिषायेण प्रागृत्पत्तेः कार्यस्य श्वस्त्रग्रापदेशः। किं तर्ष्टि ? व्याक्ततनामक्पत्वाङ्गर्यात् श्वव्याक्ततनामक्पत्वं धर्मान्तरं। …नामक्पव्याक्ततं सर्च्छव्दाईं लोके प्रसिद्धं। श्वतः प्राक्नामक्पव्याकर्णात् 'श्वसदिव'।सीत्'' (वेदा॰ भा॰, 2.1.17)।
- ² We have found before that the Being (सत्), i.e., Brahman has been obtained by abstracting all specific determinations. The non-being (श्रस्त्) here mentioned is simply the absence of all specific determinations and differentiations. The Being and non-being are therefore identical (एकीस्तः, विवेतानहंत्वं गतः). Being identical, they are indistinguishable. Having thus pointed out the fact that were in the Sruti does not mean absolute non-existence of nama-rupa, Sankara goes on to show that were could not be said to be non-existent in the set in that condition. For, if were was absolutely non-existent, if were did not exist in Brahman, it could not be produced from it. Why? Because, Sankara continues, you cannot get that from a thing which it does not contain within it. Brahman could not produce the universe from itself, unless the universe is contained in it—

यहि यच यदात्मना न वर्षते, न तस्तत उत्पदाते । 1 (वै $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, $^2.1.16$)

It follows therefore that the being (ৰন্) contained nonbeing (মন্), ² its own differentiations hidden away, merged, suppressed, within it. ^{3 &#}x27;Nothing'—We shall see that all determinations are, according to Sankara, Negations. 'Nothing' here means therefore determinations or allows.

universal, the being, the sat, as totally excluding all determinations; for it had its own differentiations implicitly present in it. Because it contained the जगत in it, it has become possible for the जगत to come out from it.

Now, we shall see how the সাবা, how the diversities of Nāma-rūpa came out—

"एकं वीजं वडुधा य: करोति" (श्वे° उ°)।

The Being distinguishes itself from itself and becomes its other. The unity suffers self-differentiation into diversity.

As the differentiations come out, there is some distinction, some वैश्वचय which now appears.¹ For Sankara remarks—ष्यस्यसारुखे प्रक्रतिविकारोच्छे दप्रसङ्गः।—निष्ठः प्रसित्त प्रतिविकारमावः इति भवति ($\hat{\mathbf{q}}^\circ$ भा $^\circ$ 2.1 6 & 2 3.9). "प्रक्रति-विकारयो भेंदेन व्यपदेशात्"—($\hat{\mathbf{q}}^\circ$ 2.1.27).

It was simply कारण before, now the কাৰে comes out in the form of कार्थ. And this कार्याकार is the other of the कारण।

³ 'काश्वाकारिय कारच' व्यवस्थापयत: कारकव्यापारस्थ चर्यवस्वमायाति (वेदा^o सा^o 2.1.18). But in the case of Brahman, कारकव्यापार is not necessary. र्ट. निमित्तान्तरानपेचात् चचरात् सभावति (सु॰ भा॰ 1.1.7। कारकमेदा-भावेऽपि प्रवृत्तिं दर्शयतः ?—इ॰भा॰ 2.1.20। परिपूर्णमित्तकन् त्रम्म—चनपेन्त्य वाम्मः साधन' स्वयमिव परिचमते—वे॰ भा॰ 2.1.24.

There was सामान्य (universal) before, now विशेषावस्था (particulars) comes out. And this विशेषावस्था is the opposite of the मामान्य।

It is well-known that all determinations are regarded by Sankara as negations.⁸

The and therefore produces its own negations from it which it contained within it.

We find therefore that the Being or Brahman produces its other, its opposite, its negation from it. In this way there is, according to Sankara, some distinction, some देखचळ, some भेद, between the cause and its effect.⁴

- ³ It is remarkable that here in this point there is complete agreement between Sankara and Hegel. Determinations are विशेषणाs, and विशेषणा operates by negation (निवर्त्तक, व्यावर्त्तक)। We quote the whole passage from Sankara-bhasya:
- यदा हि भनेकानि द्रव्यानि एकजातीयानि भनेकविश्वेषणयोगीनि, तदा विश्वेषणस्य भवेवन्तं। विश्वेषं विश्वेषणान्तरं व्यक्तिप्रदाते, यथा नीन्त्र रक्तश्च उत्पत्तम्। समानजातीयेस्य एव निवर्णकानि (negations) विश्वेषणाणि (determination) विश्वेषस्य। तहिपरीत-धन्नेवद्वाो विश्वेष्यस्य: ब्रह्मणो विश्वेषस्य नियन्तृत्वम्-ते भा 2.1।
- "To determine a thing is to limit it, to cut it off from some sphere of being. To say that a thing is green limits it by cutting it from the sphere of red, blue and other coloured things. The differentia (有取取) is that which carves out a particular class from the general class, by negating, excluding, the other species. Whatever is said of a thing denies something else of a thing. All determination is therefore negation." (W. T. Stace.)
- * Sankara shows there is some আনিয়ন, some আধিকা, some new element appearing in the effect (কাফে) ে 'জীবনা'হিষক' আনুষ্কন্দ্রমান্ত্রাক্র কাফি কাফোন্ত্র কিন্তু নিয়ন্ত্র কাফি কাফোন্ত্র কিন্তু নিয়ন্ত্র কাফিক কাফোন্ত্র কিন্তু নিয়ন্ত্র কাফিক কাফোন্ত্র কিন্তু নিয়ন্ত্র কাফিক কাফোন্ত্র কিন্তু নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন্ত্র কিন্তু নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন্ত নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন্ত নিয়ন্ত নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন নিয়ন্ত্র নিয়ন নিয

As the Being (सत्) splits into particulars, as the Being, of its own accord (संज्ञा), by its own act, has undergone self-differentiation into diversity in which it manifests itself, it is now सत् and something more; it is now सत् and diversity of nama-rūpa. The universal is therefore inflated with a determination, a difference, a negative element—nothing. This is the particular (विशेष or विकार). The being, the universal, the सत्—as determined by particularity and difference appears as the universe. It is evident from these that Sankara did not altogether deny distinction or भेद between the cause and its effect.

But is this distinction an absolute distinction?

The particulars and determinations which are produced are, in reality, not utterly and absolutely different,

absolutely and utterly other (অঅ), from the Being (অন্)। Sankara observes that it is our Avidyá—খবিতা—which sees absolute distinction, absolute separation and opposition between the cause and the effect, between the বিষয়ী and বিষয়। Avidyá looks upon the diversities of náma-rupa, the effects, the লগন—as absolutely different, as absolutely separate (খন) from Brahman.¹ Sankara has thus characterised the খবিতা—

आगरिते खप्ने वा 'चन्यदिव' चात्मनी, 'वस्त्वक्तर'निव चिवयमा प्रत्युपछापितं भवति ।.....चसित भात्मन: 'प्रविभक्ते' वस्त्वक्तरे, चसित च चात्मनि तत: 'प्रविभक्ते' चन्य: चन्यत् पछोत्—(8° भा° 4 3.3.) न चासा 'वन्य:' ब्रह्मविद चात्मकामस्य चित्त । 8

Sankara has repeatedly shown that it is not possible and proper at all to separate nama-rupas, the particulars,

¹ We regard the effects (कार्य) different— मन्य — खतन्त — from the cause which underlies hidden behind them, and treat them as separated from, outside of, the cause—as self-subsisting and independent. This is our व्यवहारित view of the world. But the व्यवहारित view is भिव्याकत। Sankara remarks in the Vedanta that "प्रमाणीभगयेष स्वतारिप 'तदनवल' मिलाह"। From the पारमाणित view, the effects are really भन्य—non-different from, identical with, the cause. This भन्य relation between कार्य and कारण is to be found elaborated in the स्वत 14 to 20 in the Vedanta Philosophy, Chapter II. 1. पारमाणित view is the real view. Although कार्य is somewhat distinct— विश्वचण—view is the real view. Although कार्य is somewhat distinct— विश्वचण—(वे० स्० 2.1.6) from the कार्य, yet in reality it must be regarded as भन्य—not भय, not other. Hence भेद and भूभेद are not of equal value. भभेद has been particularly emphasised by Sankara, but भेद has not been abolished.

⁹ By चिद्या the particular is regarded as चन्य—different from the universal. 'विशेषसंज्ञा..... 'चन्यत '-दर्शनलचणा—चिद्यानिनित्ता'—इ० भा०, 2.4.13. And also—from Brahman, and to regard them as चन, as so many self-sufficient independent entities. There is distinction, but also identity.

Sankara thus brings out the identity, the non-separation (খনব্ৰ) between the universal and the particular:—

It is Brahman, the Universal, the Being, which evolves all its determinations and differences of náma-rūpa out of the depth of its own being; what it has put forth from itself is only itself. For, it is the Being which distinguishes itself from itself and appears as its other. In putting forth its own particulars, it has not lost itself, nor has it become something else (पन). For, its other, its opposite, is only itself, as Sankara declares—

'नहि विश्रेषदर्शनमात्रेष 'वस्त्वन्यत्वं' भवति
...'स एवेति' प्रत्यभिज्ञानात्'।
कार्याकारोपि कारणस्य 'मात्मभूत' एव।
(वे॰ भा॰ 2.1.18.)

It is the self-differentiation of the more itself? into its other, its opposite—परमिश्वर एव तेन तेन चात्मना (i.e., कार्य्याकारेण) चवतिष्ठमानः \cdots स्वाति।—(वे॰ भा॰, 2.3.13).

¹ But both are not of equal importance. We must cultivate the क्षेत्रहाष्ट्र even in our ordinary practical concerns of life (खबहारिकावस्था)।

Cf. 'एव विश्रेषो विदुषां, पश्चनोऽपि प्रपच संसारं, 'पृथगा'तानी न पश्चेत्'

[ै] एक एव भवस्थानान्तरयोगात् भनेकशब्दप्रत्ययभाक्भवति । (2. 2. 17, वि॰ भा॰)।

Hence, in passing out into its opposite, it remains identical with itself (ৰ ঘৰনি স্থানিবান)৷ As it has put forth its opposite from itself, the Being (ধন্) remains, even in its opposite, identical with itself. It is the কাৰে itself which embodies itself in particular shapes—

"भपाक्षविशेषं 'कारणमेव' तत्त्विशेषवदवस्थापन्नं 'कार्य्य' संज्ञां समते"।—वे॰ भा॰, 2.3.7.

Hence the কাবে finds in its own কাঠা—not an alien other, but its own very being (কাবেমন)। For, the কাঠা is, in reality, no other but the mere form, the guise, the shape, which the কাবে itself has assumed for its own manifestation—

कारणस्य ' संम्थानमात्र ' निदं का र्य (बे $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 2.2.17.)

It follows therefore that the other is only itself; part of mire; the manifestation of its nature 1; it is, in reality, only itself—

न कार्थ्यं नाम कारणा'द्यातिरिक्त' मिस किञ्चित्। —ह° भा°, 1.6.1. •

It is the universal itself which has gone forth into its particular. In passing from one to the other, nothing has been added from outside; new material has been put forth from the womb of the being itself.

Hence, the universal sunders itself into its particularity, yet remains universal. Hence, the distinction which it gives rise to is no distinction. Therefore the world is at bottom no other than Brahman.² Therefore the universal,

The true कारण is therefore identical in all its diverse forms, which remains hidden behind (कार्याकारण तिरोद्दितम्)।

Under the influence of षविद्या, we absolutely separate and thus forget or ignore this underlying being and take the mere forms as so many independent objects—as सत्पिष्ठ, कपाल, घट, etc. But the one सत्ता (being) which is identical in all its diversity of forms, as सत्, is not itself any single individual thing or phenomenon. The 'multiplicity' is not therefore something different (भन्म) or separate altogether from the 'unity.'

We find from this discussion that there is distinction as well as identity or more properly, identity in difference, between the কাঠ and the কাৰ্য।

Sankars has therefore concluded thus-``. सलचर्ण विखचर्यस्व 1 मचरात् समावति...समसं नगत् $^{"}$ (मु $^{\circ}$ 1.1.6.

Elsewhere we find him remarking that every finite individual object is a compound of two factors—un and unn;

¹ Vide also मास्त्रकाभाष्य, गीष्° कारिका, 6 Sloka.

In Vedanta Bhasya where Sankara shows the relation between कार्य and कार्य, he shows the distinction between them by holding कार्य to be ध्वा from the कार्य। He has shown the identity between them by holding कार्य to be ध्वान्य from the कार्य। The reader should bear this in mind.

In बे° भा° 2.1.13, Sankara distinctly says that although the differences are non-different (অনুষ্) from their cause, still they remain—they are not abolished. "ল অ ব্যন্তব্যক্তি দি… দিলবাহাবী লা হরবিব্যাবাদিন গ্রীবি । "ল অ বীৰা … অক্তে অবলি । of which un is abiding and constant, while un is everchanging.¹ The readers will note that un does not mean here 'unreality.' What is variable;—the perpetually changing and succeeding forms—are called un. And what is constant amidst all these changing forms or appearances is called un.

These discussions unmistakably show that it is not at all possible for the সমন, for the nāma-rupas to break loose from the কাৰে, i.e., from Brahman—

न तत एव 'निर्भिदा' यहीतुं शकाते (a° भा $^{\circ}$, 2.4.7)²

The distinction of nama-rupa is developed within the unity of the cause—विश्रेषा: सामान्ये श्रन्तर्भवन्ति ।—क्का $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 7.4.1. सामान्यं विश्रेषान् श्रात्मखरूपप्रदानेन विश्रित्तं ।— a° भा $^{\circ}$, 2.4.7.

Hence, under no circumstances, can the नामरप be separated from Brahman and regarded as ष्या As soon as they are separated, they become unreal, false—कदलीसम्भवदसारं। It is in this sense alone, Sankara has called नगत् to be unreal. सदासना विकाशाणां सत्यतं, सतोऽन्यतेन घनततं (का° 6.6.2).

By ignoring or forgetting the Reality of the ever-constant, underlying, hidden, Brahman of which the process of the world is a gradual manifestation or appearance and by

"… सर्व्यां लोकाः साध्य-साधन-लच्चणः क्रिया-प्रालात्मकः: संहतानेक--प्राणि--कर्म्यासनावष्टस्थलात्—चिषकोऽसारोऽग्रज्ञो नदीस्रोतः:-प्रदीपसन्तानकः कदलौक्षभवदसारः प्रेनमाया-मरौच्यभः स्वप्रादिसमः तदारमगत-इष्टीनामिवकौर्य्यमानी— नित्यः सारवानिव लद्यते"—हि भाः 1.5.2.

(2) In this connection, we now desire to place before our readers some very weighty finfinite and finite. observations made by Sankara while explaining the term খনন—Infinite, and showing its relation with the finite things of the world. These observations, properly understood, will show that to separate the Vedantic Nirgun Brahman completely from the world and to treat it as vacuum and empty is to go directly against the views of the Bhāṣya-kāra.

All finite objects, Sankara observes, are limited. We can only know the limit of a thing by knowing what lies beyond the limit. We can only be aware of the end (जन) of a thing by being aware of something which stands beyond the thing. A finite is that which has a limit. If something is limited, it follows that beyond the limit, there is another something. Therefore to be finite means to be limited by something else. Sankara says:—

" चत्रतानं गोलिमिति चन्तवदेव भवति । स च चन्तो (\liminf) भिन्नेष् वस्तुष् दृष्टः" $(\hbar^\circ \, \mathrm{Min}^\circ \, 2.1)$

But limit always involves negation (निवर्शकात). A horse is a horse and not a cow, because it possesses the determinations or qualities of a horse and not those of a cow. Its being a horse is just what limits it, prevents it from being a cow. It is in its negative aspect that quality is limit. Sankara says—

In this way, one determinate thing negates its opposite, negates another determinate thing. This is what keeps one thing separate (মিই মু বনুমু) from another thing. Each one excludes or negates the other ones from it. They are thus different from one another. বনুষ্ঠ is বনুষ্ঠ for it negates (নিৰ্ম্বার) its opposite বিষয়; বিষয় for it negates its other ষত্ত. Thus one finite object negates another finite object. This is Sankara's description of the relation between finite objects.

Now can any of the finite objects exclude or negate the Infinite? No; it cannot. Why? Because, according to Vedanta, the Infinite is the Cause of all finite objects. Hence, none of the finite objects can negate their cause. Sankara has declared—

"निष्ठ कार्यं नाम वस्तुतोऽसि, यत: कारणवृद्धि 'विनिवर्त्तत''।—तै° भा°, 2.1.

For, কাথে (the effect) is not something really different from the কাৰে (the cause). Had it been different from the cause, the cause could not have produced it from itself. For, Sankara remarks—यच यदात्मना यव न वर्तते, न तत्तत उत्पदाते । -वे भा°.

What is not contained in a thing cannot be produced from it. The cause, the Infinite, contained its effect, the finite, within it which it has expelled from it. It is the Infinite, the cause, which has differentiated itself as the effect, the finite. For, what is an effect (काव्य)? It is the cause (कार्य) itself which has taken the shape of an effect—a कार्याकार।— कार्याकारोपि कारणस भाराभूत एव। — वे $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 2.1.8.

Really, the effect, the finite, is no other than the cause, the infinite itself. For, the जारच in becoming its other, has not, in reality, become something different from it. For, Sankara says—

स एवेति प्रत्यभिज्ञानात ।-वे° भा°, 2.1.18,

Hence, as the finite is not something different from, other than, the Infinite, how can it negate the idea of its cause? Even when Infinite passes over to its opposite—finite, it still remains the same. The effect, the বিমীষ, the finite—has not broken loose from the cause, the বাদাৰ, the infinite;—but remains the product of it, so that in it the cause, the Infinite, is still present, though hidden.

It is খৰিবা which separates the two. খৰিবা supposes finite is not infinite and infinite is not finite. They stand facing each other, totally opposed. But this view will make the infinite finite. Infinite, in this view, would be limited by the finite. Sankara Says—

"न ब्रह्मणः परं (outside) वस्त्वन्तरमित्तः। ब्रह्मव्यतिरित्तं वस्त्वन्तरं वारयन्ति। भव्यप्रतिषेधेऽसति, वस्तु वस्त्वन्तरात् 'व्यावर्त्तते' इति परिच्छेद (limit) एव भाव्यतः प्रसच्चेत "। (वै° भा°, 3.2.37.

Hence, infinite is not something outside the finite; it has the finite within the Infinite.

In another way, Sankara brings out the same thing—
We have seen above that समूर्ण negates or excludes विष्ड; and विष्ड excludes or negates (व्यक्षिचरति) its opposite चट.
But do the समूर्ण, विष्ड, घट—negate स्तिका, of which they are the products? He says—

Neither থিছ, nor ঘত negates the underlying causal substance— হন্ which has taken these forms, which the হন্ has expelled from itself; for, these are merely হব: হাজাৰ ^{&#}x27; 05. 'दुन्दुभिष्टणना ' and 'एकायन प्रक्रिया '—in the Brihadāranyaka. "बादााचातश्वनीनां न पृथगतुभवः किन्तु तत्साइचर्यात् ' (Sankara's 'श्रतश्चितो ।' 'तद्युक्तमिद्धकं वस्तु, व्यवद्यारियदन्वतः' (Sankara's 'स्नात्मवोध)। 'कारणाव्यये कार्यक्ष अवस्थानातृपपत्तेः '—वै° आ°, 2.3.14-

नावन् । It is the cause (चत्) which has distinguished itself from itself in the forms of विख, घट, etc. Hence we see the justification of Sankara's remark—

The कार्य is not something different from the कार्य; hence it cannot negate the idea of the cause. We have already seen that what stands at the end of a thing, what is outside of a thing, can negate it. But the Infinite being the cause runs through all the effects, underlies each of the finite effects, hence how can कार्य be treated as standing outside of, or at the end of, its कार्य; It is therefore clear that no finite effect can negate or exclude the idea of its cause, the infinite. For, it is the cause itself which has issued from it as its effect, has differentiated as its effect, has manifested itself as its other—as particular effects. Hence the Infinite does not exclude but include its effects within it. For it has not become something else, in assuming a mere form.

. The readers will remember that in the Vedanta Sutras (II.1.14-20) where the relation between the effect (ৰাই) and the cause (ৰাবে) finds an elaborate discussion, it has been shown that the effect cannot be separated from, and placed outside of, the cause and regarded as utterly other (অব) from the cause. It is really ² অবব from the cause. For, there is distinction no doubt, but the distinction is not absolute, not ultimate³; for, the বাবে itself appears as বাবে, as its other. It is therefore not really other, but বাবে itself.

² It is our चृतिद्या which makes it utterly distinct (खतन्त्र). It is our ख्यवहारिक डाल.

In this way, it is impossible to separate the effects from their cause, separate the नामच्य from their underlying Brahman. Yet, under the influence of Avidya, we separate the effects and treat them as outside of the cause, as something चय. This is a wrong view of the case. It is done in either of two ways: by separating Brahman from the world altogether as an unknowable and unknown something, or by entirely reducing the nature of the cause (Brahman) to the Nāma-rūpas, taking nāma-rūpas as self-subsisting independent-things, and ignoring the underlying hidden Brahman altogether.

6. We now come to consider the important question of the alleged unreality of the Creator—the Vedantic Iswara (ইম্ব). Several writers on Vedanta maintain the view that "Sankara was unable to rise to a higher conception of Divine character and that the as creator is recognised by the wise as unreal." This is indeed a very serious allegation against Sankara and, we confess, there are passages in the Vedanta bhāṣya which are responsible for this hasty conclusion formed with regard to the unreality of the nature of Iswara. We shall consider these passages presently. But before we do so, a remark or two on the subject is necessary.

(a) Sankara has made no distinction between the two—Brahman and Iswara. The act of creation, he says, ought not to be regarded as a separate and distinct act, by which Brahman has become something other than its own self;—as if it was Brahman first, and then became a creator. Such manner of thought would introduce a false difference in the 'nature' of Brahman which is always a real unity. The act of creation is but the revelation of its own nature. As the revelation cannot be exhaustive and must necessarily be partial, every fresh act of creation must be regarded as the revelation of its nature so far forth. The nature of Brahman being infinite (पूर्ण) and inexhaustible (पूर्ण), no act of creation can be the exhaustive expression of its nature. Sankara observes—

³ कार्याकारे सिरोहितम्।

पूर्णलं तन्न जहाति । पूर्णमेव छद्रिच्यते (a° भा $^\circ$, b° , b° , b° , b° i.e., as Brahman is inexhaustible in its nature, it is eternally making (ভারেম্বার) itself—creating itself—to realise its own nature. If Brahman, creating the world, were to exhaust its nature, the world, in that case, would have to be regarded as a complete and finished whole. But such cannot be the nature of Brahman which is inexhaustible and infinite. Sankara has told us that—

"ध्येय बज्ञ, i.e., Iswara can never really be an aggregate of many parts—भेदसमाजुलं घनेकरसं" (ह° भा°, 5.1.1.)¹ In the Gitá-Bhásya he observes that—

"the being which has revealed itself as the world is no other than the 'nature' of Brahman itself." 2

In the Kena-Bhásya, a similar remark is recorded—

"तस्यैव ब्रह्मणः ... सगुणलेन उपासनम्। ब्रह्मीत परः, लिङ्गात्।

That is to say—the immanent God is really the same as the transcendent Brahman. Sankara is still more explicit and expressive there in the sentence—

"ब्रह्मशब्दवाच्य ई.यर इति श्रवसीयते" (के $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 3.1.)

Elsewhere, the same fact is stated expressly thus—"It is the same transcendental Paramátmá who sustains everything in the world by His Power."

In the Mundaka-Bhāṣya, he observes that-

"the immanent God is in reality nothing but the transcendental Brahman"

" षचरं निर्विश्चेषं पुरुषं सर्थः मन्तेष उक्का, पुनस्तदेव 'स्विशेषं' वक्तव्य-मिति प्रवहते "। (सु[°] भा°, 2.1.3.).

Sankara has definitely condemned those who would make the slightest distinction between and the

"भेदहष्ट मीश्वराष्ट्यं, तदेव ब्रह्म, ष्यसम्बन्धनं कुर्व्वती भग्नं भवति" (ते° भा°, 2.7).

^{&#}x27;'चरेषु भचरेष् 'अस्येव खरूपस्य' (निर्गु गस्य) या या भिन्यित्तः, सा सा भस्य 'विश्रष्टरूपं'खरूपसज्ञावमावेख सर्व्व' विभित्ते" (गै॰भा॰, 15.19). द्वेश्वर is only the विश्रिष्टरूप of Brahman itself, not something separate or भूत्य ।

Thus, it is wrong to ascribe to Sankara the view that in his system, his Iswara is something other than (प्रा) and distinct from Brahman, that Iswara is a lower and empirical Brahman. It is the Sankara's established theory that, in revealing itself as the world, Brahman has not become something other than its own nature.

It is not possible to regard the निर्मुण and the समुख as two separate entities. We have already seen that behind the multiplicity of Nāma-rūpa there is the underlying unity (जञ्च). With a view to show that this unity is not to be reduced to the multiplicity, the निर्मुण aspect has been emphasised, which shows that जञ्च is unaffected by the changing Nāma-rūpas. As this unity is the indwelling spirit working in the world, as it is the impelling force—energy which makes things move or change, its समुख aspect has been mentioned, which shows that it controls and directs all movements—changes—in the world, viz., standing unaffected yet controlling

N. B.—Col. Jacob in his introduction to his edition of the Vedānta-sāra is wrong in pointing out 'inconsistencies' in the writings of Sankara. The reader will see that he has failed to grasp the true sense of the relation of 南氣 and 資理 | and acting—the निर्नेष and the समुख aspects are given in the Vedanta.

(b) Without taking into consideration the foregoing passages of Sankara, much emphasis has been laid upon certain passages which occur in the Vedanta-bhâsya (II.1.14). One of such passages runs to this effect—

"It is only in the practical concerns of life that there is Iswara and the idea of a Controller and the Controlled. But when the real knowledge will dawn, where is the creation and where is the creator?"

> "परमार्थावस्थार्या ईशौनीशितव्य-व्यवहाराभाव: प्रदर्श्वते । व्यवहारावस्थायान्तु छत्तः स्रुताविप ईश्वरादिव्यवहार: (वे॰ भा॰, 2.1.14).

The true idea of the passage, as it appears to us, has not been correctly grasped and Sankara has been unjustly ridiculed as "recognising a pinchbeck deity" and his system has been thought "to have no place in it for theism."

We shall here try to arrive at the right view of Sankara's remarks from his own standpoint, and we erave our readers' particular attention to this important point.

The world is the manifested form of Brahman. We have already seen that Brahman, of its own motion, has manifested its 'nature' in the form of the universe. This is its immanent aspect. Ordinarily, people take this aspect of Brahman as Iswara. In our everyday server, in our all practical concerns of life, we are quite satisfied with taking the world—the nama-rūpas—as the manifested form of God-tat1 As Iswara is the cause of the world, the world is regarded as His manifested form. We do not care to direct our thought to the deeper implications involved in this view of Iswara.

That this is the people's conception of Iswara was known to Sankara quite well. For, we find him remarking in his Vedanta-bhásva thus-

> ''सर्व्ववारणास विकारधन्त्रीरिं के सि'दिशिष्टः' परमेश्वर: चपाखलेन निहिंश्यते । -- सर्व्यवनी सर्वगनः सर्वरसः इत्यादिना" $-\hat{\mathbf{q}}^{\circ}$ भा \circ , 1.1.20.

Iswara, then, is ordinarily restricted to the family wis, as He is the cause of the famits, the Nama-rupas, the world. This is the faste-form, of Brahman.2 Brahman, in this view, is taken to be entirely manifested in this world. That there is still a transcendental form is not at all thought of. It is assumed that because the world has been deduced from Him, He becomes the world, He is the world. That, in reality, He is indeed the world, but yet something more is quite forgotten.3 People think that

² It is the notion of the Divine immanence. It is the pantheistic ides of "All is one". "सर्वेकारणलात सर्व्यातमकलोपपत्तः" (के 1.1.20) पादोऽस्य सर्व्वाभृतानि'-दित 'सर्व्वात्मीपपत्ते:"-वे° भा°, 1.1.26. As it is the cause itself which transforms itself into various forms of effects, so God is taken to be an all-inclusive whole. হৈব is the only Reality existing on his own account, and that there is no other Reality (বল্প) beyond God (হৈব)।

We have already seen that under the influence of Avidya (খৰিয়া), people quite ignore the separate being of the cause and regard the effects as something quite distinct (খৰা), as self-subsisting objects. This is called by Sankara as অৰম্ভাবিল-stand-point. Thus, we quite forget the transcendental aspect of Brahman and restrict it to its immanent aspect alone. In this way, the বিমিত-ব্য of Brahman, i.e., Iswara is looked upon as quite sufficient for the purpose of worship. This is our ordinary view of Iswara. This view has been emphasised by Sankara when he declares Iswara to be—"দুৰ্ত্বনুষ্ণ: দুৰ্ত্বনুষ্ণ: "etc., quoted above.

But, although, we admit, this view of Iswara is sufficient for the ordinary purposes of life, still there is the other side which, philosophy demands, can never be lost sight of. As Brahman is perfect and transcendental, as it is inexhaustive and inexhaustible (प्राथ and पूर्व), no one of its determinations, no one of its definitions can exhaust its potentiality, no one of its actualisation can fix it in a rigid form and be regarded as final.²

(वे° भा°, 1.2.7.)। " उपाधिषु 'सविशेषा' इव भवभासन्ते, न च खाभाविकीं 'भविशेषात्मतां' जहित, तदत्" (वे°, 3.2.25)। "'सर्व्यगतः' परसेश्वरः, एकः 'स्ततन्त्य' य' and "रूपं रूपं 'प्रतिरूपो', 'वह्निय'" (कं आध्य)। In Vedanta, परसेश्वर is everything, yet he is more. This is the true view.

- 1 " एतावानेव भात्मा, परमेश्वरी वा, नात: परमसीति—ईह्यं ज्ञानं (तामसानामेव भवति)—गी $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 18.22.
- s To restrict the cause to its particular manifested effects and to regard these as its complete and final expressions is wrong. बीता has denounced this view as तासंस्कि।—
 - "यत्तु क्रत्यवदेविचान् वार्ये सक्तमद्भेतुवं.....तत्तामसमुदाद्वतं" (18.22.) ।

But, we have seen, it is our Avidya (षविद्या) which makes us forget this transcendental aspect of Brahman and to reduce or restrict it to a particular manifestation. For this reason Sankara has described Iswara—God—as—यवहारिक and also as षविद्यासक.¹ The readers will see that by this, Iswara does not become an unreality. Sankara remarks—nie., It is नाया which conceals the transcendental and inexhaustible nature of Brahman and entirely reduces it to, or identifies it with, the three manifested states of activities (viz., दृष्टि, स्थित and प्रवय)। But the true view of the case is that Iswara (God) though the creator or the cause of the world, has not and does not necessarily become restricted or entirely reduced to the effects (कार्यंड or विकार) created; but He has also a transcendental nature which remains unaffected by these. This is the true view of God. Sankara has declared for this reason that—

'निष्युदेशस्यापि' ब्रह्मणः उपाधिविश्रेषसम्बात्...प्रदेश-

- विभेषपरिग्ही न विरुध्यते।—(वें° 1.1.24)

It is clear therefore that although Iswara has assumed the manifested forms—although He is family fame; still it is in reality nothing but Brahman; that is to say, although Brahman appears acting in the world in its immanent aspect, yet it remains unaffected in its transcendental nature. It is wrong to take the immanent aspect alone as an independent reality and to ignore the transcendental aspect which is the real aspect.

It is the ignorant (अध्यक्ष:) who regard the inexhaustible Brahman am entirely reduced to its manifestations (आक्रि) !

From these discussions, the readers will find now that—the immanence of God must not be taken in the sense of Divine identification with the process of the finite world, and the transcendency also ought not to be taken in the sense of absolutely separating God from the world as an unknowable something, without recognising His activity as indwelling spirit. It is the immanence of transcendence, in reality.

(c) Now, we shall come to explain some other passages in the Sankara-bhásya which have produced the erroneous opinion about the unreality of the Vedantic Iswara. It will be seen that Sankara begins his discussion about Iswara in this part of his commentary with the sentence—

''षविद्यारमक-नामरूपोपाध्यनुरोधी ईश्वरो भवति'' (वे $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 2.1.14) ''षविद्यारमक-नामरूपवीजन्याकरणापेचलात् ईश्वरस्य''—(Ibid).

Finding that the word মৰিয়াংনৰ has been used in connection with ইয়াং, the conclusion has been hastily formed that ইয়াং must be unreal, false.

• Now, what does the word শ্বিয়ান্ত্রল really mean? We have carefully examined the various commentaries of Sankara and have found that in connection with नाम-इप, he has used these words—শ্বিয়াক্তবিষ, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তাধিন, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিয়া বিশ্বাধিন, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তাধিন, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্ত্র্যক্তাধিন, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তাধিন, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিন, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিক, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিক, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিক, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিক, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিক, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিক, শ্বিয়ামন্ত্র্যক্তিক, শ্ we come to see that wheresoever he uses the epithet पविदासियत in connection with नामक्ष्य, the enquiry would naturally arise to the effect-- अविद्याकत्थित on what? and अविद्याकत्थित how? That is to say, are the नामकपड imagined by पविदा on the self?;—and are the नामदपं imagined by पविद्या on the self as its essential property? This disposes of the enquiry about the 'on what' and 'how'? The two phrases पविद्या-प्रत्युपस्थापित and पविद्या-ध्यारोपित convey the same sense with पविदान लियत। Only one phrase, namely,-षविद्यात्मक now remains to be explained. The readers will see that when this phrase invariably occurs in connection with the term नाम-हप, as in the case of the three other phrases, it must also convey the same sense and significance which those other phrases convey. We therefore would not be wrong, if we say that the नामक्षs are 'पविदायन', because they are imagined to be the essential property of the self. This is the sense of ' चविद्यात्मक ' here.

In the famous Introduction to the Vedanta-bhasya, Sankara has taken care to explain the sense of the term used which it would convey in his commentaries. From the explanation given here, it will appear that under the influence of used, men ignore the distinct presence of the underlying unity and identify it with the changing states and activities evolved from it. Men, under the power of Avidya, identify the underlying and with the manifested world. In this way, the manifested Namarūpas, i.e., the world becomes the only Reality standing on its own account, and beyond this reality there is no other Reality (রয়) at all. In this way, ইন্থৰ is regarded quite an independent reality, absolutely separate and different (খন্য) from রয়. Now, Sankara has declared such view of ইন্থৰ as unreal, false and খনিয়ালক। For, Brahman in appearing as creator—as ইন্থৰ—has not in reality lost its own nature, neither has it passed out of itself into something else—

निष्ठ विशेषदर्शनमात्रेण, वस्तन्थतं भवति,

 \cdots ास एवेति प्रत्यभिज्ञानात् ।-(वे $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$ 2.1.18)

The fact is that if you look upon হৈছে as a different being, as other than (জন) Brahman, you are wrong. But if you regard Him as an aspect of Brahman and therefore nothing but Brahman itself—this is the correct view.

Thus the readers will find now that Sankara has not denied $23.

(d) The created elements have been evolved from the 'nature' of Brahman for its own realisation. Brahman has not sundered itself into these elements; it has not actually passed into, or been converted into, these elements and thereby has become something other than its own nature. It expresses itself through these. We have therefore no right to separate these from it and take them as 'something' distinct and complete in themselves. Hence is Sankara's remark—

" परमाथावस्थायां कुत एव वा स्टिप्ट: ? " (वे $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 2.1.22)

The evolving changes—the diversities of emerging Nama-rūpa—are not something other than (খৰ) Brahman's nature. We can not sever their connection with the underlying Brahman, but they must be looked upon as really the further and further revelations of this nature 1.

When we come to truly realise the unity of Brahman as untouched and unaffected by the evolving changes, we will then look upon the world and all the changes evolving therein as mere means, medium, symbols, 2 through which Brahman is realising its own nature—is expressing itself. Everything will appear as incorporated 3 in Brahman as its necessary expressions. This is the correct interpretation of the passage under notice, in the light of the Sankara's entire theory. No other view is possible. One who has declared Iswara to be eternally existent (निज्ञिक्ष) cannot declare him to be unreal.

That this is the case will appear also from the illustration tion 4 recorded by Sankara which we now desire to explain. To express the idea of the letters, we employ certain points, lines, strokes, etc. The letters do not themselves pass into or become actually converted into these points, lines, strokes. These merely express the nature of the letters. These are symbols standing for the letters which find their expression in them. Such is the case also with the numbers. The numbers-one, two, three, etc.-are expressed through certain lines and points. They do not actually pass into, or are converted into, these lines and points. These are merely symbols which are employed to express the nature of the Separated from the numbers which find expression in them, and taken as independent things,-the lines, points, etc., lose their value and become unreal.1 So long as they are taken in connection with the numbers which they express, they have their value. them off from the numbers, they at once become useless. Such is the case with the created elements, and Brahman. As soon as they are separated from the underlying Brahman which expresses itself through them, they lose their value and are quite useless. Hence these cannot be regarded as something independent—अव-self-sufficient and complete in themselves; but they are भन्य from (i.e., not really other than) Brahman underlying them. In the third chapter of this book we have tried to explain the relation of the cause and the effect elaborately. We need not repeat here the arguments used there. It will suffice to say that "The first part of Sankara's causal theory implies that the causal reality is distinct from its effects or its successive manifestations, because it has a 'nature,' a खरूप, a खभाव (swarupa or swavaba) of its own, and it cannot therefore be resolved into, or identified with, the effects or the changes emerging from it. Sankara expresses this idea in—

" न तु कारणस्य कार्थात्मत्वं" (वे $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 2.1.9) $_{\circ}$ "

" The second part of the theory implies that the cause is no doubt distinct from, and independent of, its effects or the emergent changes; but the effects cannot be separated from their underlying cause and regarded as independent and self-sufficient 'things' (ৰন্তঃ), each complete in itself. The effects must therefore be regarded as ananya (মন্ত্র) from their cause; i.e., the real 'nature' of the cause expresses itself gradually, or becomes realised in, these successive effects. The latter are therefore mere forms, means, instruments for the realisation of the nature of the cause which underlies them. It is not therefore possible to separate any of the effects from the underlying cause which expresses itself in them. Separated from it, they would lose their value and become useless."

We find therefore from the illustrations quoted above that the successive changes are inseparable from their underlying cause which gradually realises or expresses its own nature in and through them. The underlying causal reality has not actually passed into, or been converted into, these evolving changes,—thereby becoming something else other than its own nature (\P).

7. It follows from this exposition that what gradually expresses its inexhaustible nature in its changes, cannot exhaust itself in them and so become identical with them. Yet translating the word ananya (খনন) as absolutely "identical," Sankara's theory has been reduced to a kind of 'Pantheism' which he took so much pains to refute in various parts of his commentaries.

Taking Sankara to be a Pantheist, it has also been supposed that he has, in his theory, not only abolished Iswara but also abolished or negated the 'Individuality' or the 'personality' of the finite individuals, making them merely parts of an all-inclusive abstract whole, viz., Brahman:—"ascribing to this Brahman alone the agency of all works." Many critics of Sankara's theory believe that in the Adwaita philosophy as expounded by Sankara, the finite individuals are not responsible for their works, that all activities proceed from the agency of Brahman alone.

There are valuable arguments by which Sankara has established the 'individuality' of the selves which we have discussed elsewhere. Here in this chapter, we shall content ourselves only examining the position whether the individual beings are not responsible for their works in this system of philosophy, so far as the 'theory of creation' is concerned.

We find in our daily observation that the experiences of Differences in ex. one individual man differ in their ove differindividual, character from the experiences of periences prove differences in 'natures. another individual. Your experience and mine are not of the same character. Even the individuals born and brought up under similar circumstances develop different experiences, exclusively belonging to each. If Brahman—the only Individual—be reduced to the relations of the world, he alone can be held responsible for this unequal distribution of the experiences or fortunes of different individuals, and the finite individuals would thereby be absolved from their share in the responsibility for their experiences. Sankara appears to remark in the Vedantabhāsya (II. 1. 34) that for the inequalities of the experiences, the works of the individuals are to be held responsible. A hasty idea has been formed from this remark that as in this system there are no real individuals at all, these actions alone constitute the so-called individuality of men. A western writer has thus written about Sankara's theory—

"Its resolution of human life into a series of acts mechanically related keeps it at what we must describe at a low level."

That in the Sankara-system, the actions are but the responses made by the individual to the external environment with which there is an interaction, and that the source of this response is the 'nature' of the individual which underlies these actions, and that this nature cannot be resolved into these activities—all these points can be proved without much ado from the pages of Sankara's commentaries. We shall record in this place only one argument employed in the Vedanta-bhásya to expose the absurdity of the position held by the critic above referred to, which will suffice for our present purpose.

8. Every individual self, Sankara remarks, has a two-fold

Individuals—their substantive and adjectival modes of existence. mode of existence—substantive (অভ্ৰেদ or বিমীজ) and adjectival (মন্দ্ৰন্দি-ছে or বিমীজ). In his substantive mode, he exists for himself, he belongs to himself. In his adjectival mode, he is related to others,

he exists for others. His substantive existence or खरप cannot be resolved into the adjectival existence; for, the individual is always more than his mere relations. His खरप (Swarupa) is permanent and transcendent (क्ट्रस); but his सम्बन्ध-इप, i.e., his relations with others depend on the things with which he comes into interaction, and these relations therefore are always liable to changes. Thus, there is a Swarup (खरप) belonging to each individual being which underlies the relations or the activities elicited from this खरूप (Swarupa) through its relation with other objects.

How is it possible, in the face of such clear argu-

'Nature' of individual selves cannot be resolved into mere relations or works. ments, to come to the conclusion that the system of Sankara has left no place for the 'individuality,' and that the individuals are mere aggregate of their actions or relations? It follows irresistibly from this discussion on the subject in question that when Sankara apparently makes the works of the individuals responsible for their inequalities, he really makes the underlying 'natures' or easy (swarupas) of each individual responsible for the special character of the works issuing out from him. This will be evident, if we consider the character of the collateral arguments used by Sankara in this very place (वे भा°, II. I. 34). He illustrates his position here by showers of rain and the germination of distinct kinds of crops from their respective seeds. The peculiar and the distinct nature inherent in each class of seeds is the true cause, says he, for the visible inequalities in the development of different plants, each distinguished from each class;—though the general and common cause for the growth and germination of crops must be held to be the showers acting upon the seeds.¹ It is well-known that Sankara has used the term 'seed,' i.e., बीज with reference to the four different types of individuals distinguished from one another in their nature and character. We would refer our readers to a passage in the Bhásya on the Chandogya Upanishad where this line is to be found—

" तेषां खर्ले षां भूतानां शैष्धेव ' वीजानि ' भवन्ति,

- —— चरुजं, जीवजसुद्धिज्ञमिति । (जीवज
- ——includes खेदज' and जरायुज')।" (का॰ भा॰, 6.3.1.)

The seed (बोज) therefore includes in it the living 'natures' of the individual selves, each distinguished from the other class.² The difference in experience therefore is to be accounted for by the difference in the respective 'natures' or stor of the individuals. The result reached here will be far more evident if another passage is considered in this connection. In the Vedanta-bhásya (III. 2. 9), a discussion runs to the effect whether, when a man wakes up after a deep sleep, it is the

> "न च अन्येन सामिक्षतस्य कर्माणो, अन्य:श्रेषिक्रयायां प्रवित्तिमुक्ति" i.e., A piece of work half done by one man, cannot be brought into completion by a different man.

Again, Sankara speaks of 'memory' (জুনি) here. The man exercising his memory, recollects where he left off his past work and where he is to begin now. The works themselves cannot exercise the memory.¹ It must be the underlying self which does it and recollects his past work and connects it with the present. It is therefore to this self that both the works must belong, and it is not the works themselves which can recollect themselves. Here again, by the phrase—

" चक्रताभ्यागम and क्रतप्रणाश"-

Sankara makes the underlying self responsible for his works. By holding the individual man responsible for his works done by him (or left undone by him), Sankara clearly establishes the fact that behind the works done, there is the underlying 'nature' or easy (Swarupa) of the man which is really accountable for its works. Otherwise, if the man be simply an aggregate of his works, then his present work being the necessary outcome of his antecedent work in time and predetermined by it,—you cannot make the man responsible for his present works.

9. It may not be out of place here to refer, in this connection, to the arguments used by Sankara in the Vedanta-bhásya, which will also show that difference in the works or activities really implies difference in the deeper 'natures' which underlie the works or activities. The argument is originally used to expose the absurdity of the theory of Asadkáryya-váda. It is everywhere observed that certain definite changes or activities are invariably accompanied by a definite 'nature' behind them. Certain other definite changes or actions are invariably accompanied by another definite 'nature' which is utterly distinct and different from the 'nature' mentioned transformations above. In all the successive changes of मृत्तिका (say, a lump of earth), the 'nature' of चित्रका is seen behind them (but not the nature of a tree). Again, in all the successive transformations or changes of a tree, the nature of the tree-but not the nature of the earth-is seen behind them. Why, it may be asked, is such the case everywhere in connection with all kinds of definite changes or activities? 1-Simply because, these definite changes or transformations are determinations of the nature of the earth, and not of any other nature. This proves the fact that definite changes or actions belong to definite 'natures,' and these natures are distinguished, one from the other.2 A similar argument, slightly changed, is given elsewhere. If a man wants to produce an earthen vessel, he must collect some earth for the purpose. milk must be collected, if he wants to produce curd. collection of earth will not serve his purpose in the latter case. Thus, definite 'natures' only, can produce definite works or changes. If there are not definite natures actually present in the world, anything could be made to produce any work indiscriminately. There would have been no difference in the works at all. For, there would be nothing to distinguish one kind of work from another. These arguments very clearly prove that every finite individual possesses a definite nature of its own which cannot be resolved into the works or activities produced from it. We fail to understand how Sankara's system can be held to negate the individualities.

10. "The creation," according to Sankara, "is but the gradual manifestation of diverse (सामान्य) and the Universals (सामान्य) in the form of individual objects (विशेष) produced from them." All finite individual objects are a compound of two factors—the universal and the particular. The universal or ভালাৰ stands to the individual objects (বিশ্বৰঃ) as unity to multiplicity. There is but one universal cow, while there are many individual cows. There is the clay, while there are its many particular differentiations— ব্যুক্, বিশ্ব, বত. Thus the world of the Universals (বাৰাৰ) manifests itself in the multiplicaties (fairs) of the sense-world. Thus, the truth of all particular things we find in the Universals.

The true सामान्य is thus used in the Vedanta-bhāṣya to Each individual is a compound of सामान्य and विशेष. denote the Universals or the deeper 'natures' of the single individuals, and the term विशेषs to denote the states and activities (which constitute the finite individual beings) produced from these 'natures' through interaction with the environment' (कारकवापार). The readers should remember that in his theory of causality as explained by Sankara (वे॰ भा॰, 2.1.14—20) the term Sāmānya stands for the causal reality; and the term Visesas stands for its effects which are but its appearances or forms or shapes or its modes of acting in which the causal reality reveals its nature.² The same reality appears in many different forms. The true causal

[&]quot; सामान्य' 'खरूप'-श्रव्हेन परिभाषितं। खरूपपरिभाषा च स्थिरतामावेषा।" Sankara also says—^{&#}x27;' खिरस्रभावानां \cdots कारणभावदर्भगत् '' (वे $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 2.2.6).

Vijnāna also explains—

[&]quot;विश्रेषा हि चागमापायितया न द्रव्यस्य स्वरुपाणि"।

Sankara also says-

[&]quot; विश्वेषस्त विक्रिया " (तै भा°, 2.8)। reality is therefore identical in all its diverse effects or forms, but is not itself any single individual thing.1—

" सामान्याष्ट्रि विशेषा चत्पद्यमानाः हस्यन्ते, सदादेषेठादयः " (वे॰ भा॰, 2.3.9).
" नामसामान्यात् - विशेषनामाण्यि यज्ञदत्तदेवदत्त इत्येवमादिप्रविभागानि - विभन्यन्ते चत्पद्यन्ते"

—इ° भा∘, 1.6.1.

That the causal reality (বানাৰ) is active points to something beyond it with which it interacts. The term কাবে-আবাৰ stands for stimulating conditions which make possible its interaction, evoking its responses and activities (s.e. বিশ্বয়).

" न हि कारकमन्तरेण क्रिया सम्भवति" ($\mathbf{e}^{\circ}, 2.4.14$).

Elsewhere in this connection Sankara has written-

"There are in the world diverse universals (सामान्यत) involving their particulars (विशेषत) which they produce—both sentient and insentient. All these Universals form a hierarchy and in their graduated series (पारम्पर्यग्राम) are included and comprehended in the one highest universal, i.e., in Brahman. It is Brahman which contains and connects with it all these universals." Brahman is the central controlling unity of all universals, so that the whole form an organic unity in which all सामान्यs are fused.1

Now, it is clear that in the Sankara-system, the deeper 'natures' or ways of the finite individuals are not denied. It is in this way then that the difference of experiences or works implies difference in the deeper 'individual natures' which underlie them. Brahman is thus absolved from any share in the inequalities or differences of the works for which the inner 'natures' (ways) of the individuals are solely responsible,—Brahman being looked upon as a general controller or director of all the activities set a-going in the world. It proves also that Brahman has a distinct 'nature' (way) of its own which cannot be resolved 2 into the evolving changes, and neither can

N.B.—These सामान्य are elsewhere (तें° भा°, 2.6) called as Divine Ideas—संखा: जामा:—(संजल्प) and these are not different from (धमन्या:) the nature of Brahman. There is, the क्लान्दीन्य says, a causal relation between these Divine Ideas and the manifested individual things in the world (क्षा° भा°, 8.5.4).

N. B.—The 'Universals' may be called as the Ends. Brahman is the absolute End to which all beings strive. Each being has its own end in itself. But Brahman—as absolute End—includes all lower ends (খলমাৰ:).

the individuals be treated, in this system, as mere parts of an all-inclusive abstract whole. We have found that Brahman is a Reality which maintains its unity and identity in the multiplicity of the ever-changing, but inseparable, elements of the universe—which cannot therefore be taken as a "difference-less, empty, pantheistic void."

11. We shall now proceed to show how Sankara has characterised the 'nature' of Brahman.

Brahma's 'nature' —It is (a) self-conscious and (b) self-determining power, and (c) is the supreme good.

In many parts of his commentaries, Sankara has made a very valuable observation which, we regret to note, seems to have escaped the attention of many critics of his Adwaita theory.

He has repeatedly stated, and drawn our special attention to, the important truth that 'unity' and 'multiplicity' cannot both be held to be equally true in respect of the same thing. If a particular object be 'one,' it cannot also be held to be its opposite, i.e. 'many.' Because, 'one,' and 'many' are of opposing characters and contradict one another. One cannot be put as a rival to the other; for, the claims of both cannot be adjusted. If a thing be possessed of several qualities or states, it cannot also be devoid of all qualities. Brahman is a 'unity' and, as such, it retains that character, throughout, under all circumstances.¹ It cannot be reduced to the multiplicity of the transformations which are produced out of it. Such being the case, the multiplicity which is working in the world indicates the presence of a unity behind it and this unity cannot be phenomenalised. For, it is the presupposition of the 'many,' and its presence and operation are necessary to connect the 'many' to it.² The multiplicity of transformations issuing out of the 'unity' is not, therefore, of equal value,³ though inseparable ⁴ from it. The 'many' are the expressions or manifestations of the 'one,' without which the real nature of 'unity' could not have been comprehended.⁵

Nature of Brahman.

With these general observations, we come now to consider how Sankara has characterised the nature (अद्य) of Brahman.

- 1. Brahman—is a self-conscious subject (মানা)—
- (a) We can, to a certain extent, learn the nature of Brahman by discovering the nature of ourselves—our own self. The self of man is in essence one, but yet this unity is manifested in several cognitive states and functions. Consciousness is our essence, and it is really the consciousness of Brahman, and it is this consciousness within whose embrace we live. Whenever an object is presented to our senses, we immediately come to be conscious of it. That an object of consciousness is there, and yet we are not conscious of it—is a contradiction. But the objects of consciousness may change, one object may succeed another, but the subject (जाता) which is conscious of these changing objects does not change. It underlies, unaffected, all its conscious states, hidden behind them.

- (b) Consciousness which is our essence is constant. It retains its own character always. The particular states of consciousness (বিম্প্রিয়ান) are the modes which are evoked from it by its connection with the external objects.' And whenever these are produced, they appear permeated by, and embraced within, the Consciousness,² and what is pervaded must lie within the pervader.³ These particular modes or the cognitive states are included within the consciousness itself. They are felt as its objects (বিষয়ন্বা ভব্যমানা:), and the conscious subject (মানা) remains unaffected by them (থা যথা বিষয়; ন বন ছাঁয়ন বছন...বা).
- (c) The presence of a conscious subject, the "I," thus accompanies each of our particular states whenever they are produced.⁴ This "I" is present in all our acts not determined by anything else (निम्तालर निर्पेच). It is our true self, and the particular states constitute our ordinary empirical self. The latter is really the 'object' of the former.¹ We are thus finite and infinite in our nature,—a combination of subject and object.² It is the infinite lying hidden in us which, as an End, moves us towards its fulfilment or realisation.

From these considerations, we come to the following conclusions:—

(i) As Brahman has no other cause of itself and is thus self-caused; so it has no other knower of itself: It is self-knower. As it is the knower of all, its knowability is not dependent on anything else. It knows itself: It is thus the absolute knower.³ If it be an object of a conscious subject other than itself, it would be dependent upon that. Its self-subsisting independence would vanish: it would not be a self-explanatory principle. That which is determined by something other than itself cannot be regarded as the first knower. But Sankara has defined Brahman as 'that which is in itself and is conceived through itself.' If it has another knower, it must fail to be a self-determined and self-conscious principle.' Sruti has declared therefore—

- (ii) Our knowledge, as we have already seen, is dependent on, and determined by, the object² which is 'other' than us, which is outside ³ us. Our মান্তল is thus variable and dependent. But the consciousness of Brahman is self-determined and self-sufficient (অথবিত্ত, মান্তল it is not produced or determined by something other than itself. In the earlier part of this chapter it has been pointed out that it produces its object from out of itself, and therefore its object, the world,—is not something other (अन्य), but only itself.⁵ It is thus a self-determined principle. In manifesting its object, it manifests itself; in thinking of the world, it only thinks itself. It is thus at once the subject and object of its thought. We find therefore that Brahman is a self-conscious subject—the first knower.

We thus find that in Vedanta, Brahman is a self-conscious, self-determined subject.³ It is not, as many hold, a "homogeneous impersonal intelligence."

II. Brahman—is Directive Power (प्रेरियता)—

All the activities manifested in the world have behind them a unity which must be the source, of which they are the visible products; and this source or power is realising itself in these activities. Sankara's arguments in proof of Brahman as the seat of power are well-known. They are:—

(i) Where regularity (नियमेन प्रवर्तनम्) and adaptability (रचना) 4—are visible in any action, these marks indicate the presence and operation of a Director (यनवाभी).5

³ In Sankara-bhásya, the terms মুন্তমানির, হোণীয়র—occur frequently. These term's, as we have already explained, mean—Not dependent on, not determined by, something other than itself. It is self-determined and hence self-conscious. For, the world is in reality not other, but itself. In knowing the world, it knows itself. Hence it is not determined by anything other, but itself.

N. B.—It is to be noted that this does not mean that Sankara has abolished the world. He simply holds it to be चन्न from Brahman, from the पारमार्थिक standpoint.

- (ii) Where a combined activity (संहननम्) for a common purpose (एका यंद्रासिलेन) is visible—where parts are mutually related and act in subordination of the whole—it is to be inferred that a purposive power is present and operative behind such activity—which (power—सामर्थ) has combined the elements and directs them for its own purpose.
- (iii) All material object in activity proves the presence of an intelligent principle as the source of these activities.²

III. Brahman is the supreme End or the supreme Good (মানন্ধেম্ব)—

The varieties of pleasure, pain, etc., Sankara declares, which we find manifested in the world and which the जीवs enjoy show the constant presence of a perfect good which finds higher and higher realisation in them.

Now, the readers will find from these discussions that all the phenomenal cognitions elicited from the self are premeated and pervaded by the eternal consciousness underlying them²; and the self is the source of all its visible activities in which the underlying power is manifesting itself partially. The self is, for this reason, be resolved into the activities of the organs, manas, body, etc. 'किं यथाप्रसिद्धनेव कार्य-करण-संघातस्य प्रेषियद्वतम् ?'—इत्याद्दि. Praṇa is the root-cause of all kinds of activities and the soul is the power behind this Praṇa in activity. The source of all activities must itself be a Power. This Upanishad is invaluable, for it holds the soul to be will-power.

In क्या भाष्य, this good is called साधु. "साध्यर्थस्य खीकादिकार्येषु कारणस्य भनुगतलात् साधुम्रब्दवाच्यं...ब्रह्म वा खोकादिकार्येषु भनुगतम् "—2.2.1. Cf. also " श्रन्यच व्याप्यं, चन्यत्-व्यापकं; न तेनैव तत् व्याप्यते । कम्मै हि कर्चुं:क्रियया व्याप्यमानं भवित (इ॰ भा॰, 4.4.6). characterised as Sattā-sphurti-rūpah (सत्ता-स्कृति-त्वः).¹ It is partially manifest in its cognitions and in its activities, and in varieties of pleasure, pain, etc., and they are therefore regarded as a means—दारभूतान—indicative marks—for the presence and operation of the underlying Rational power.²

It is very hard to believe how such broad and clear facts have escaped several writers who have, unjustly, exhibited Sankara's Brahman or the self as a mere "abstract intelligence" to the learned world.

ing Sankara's view on the purpose of the purpose or end the creation of the universe as stated by him in his commentaries. It has been shown above that in the System of Vedanta, it is held that Brahman has a 'nature,' a स्वभाव, a स्वद्य, of its own; and this nature cannot be resolved into anything else. This nature (स्वभाव) is constant and does not vary

[&]quot; निष्कुलं निष्कुरं...जगद्दीजप्रवर्त्तकं नियन्तृत्वात् चन्तर्यामिसंज्ञं भवति "— (ए॰ भा॰)। "चेतनेनाप्रवर्त्तितस्य प्रवस्यनुपपत्ते;" (वि॰ भा॰, 3.2.38.).

³ So it is likened sometimes to the reflected image of the sun upon a surface of a lake. As the reflected image is an imperfect and partial expression of the sun which underlies the image; so the nature of the self is imperfectly and partially reflected or manifested in our cognitive states and activities, etc.—

[&]quot; तदल:करण-देहिन्द्रयीपाधिहारिषैव निहि श्वत ' विज्ञानादि'-शक्टै:।"

under any circumstances. This nature remains identical, even in its relation with the things of the manifested world (उपाधियोगदिए). An object, Sankara remarks,¹ must have always one nature and one nature alone; it cannot have more than one nature. Otherwise, it would be impossible to recognise the object. Brahman is always a unity and it does not vary in its relation to any place, time, object or circumstances.

The diversities of the changing nāma-rūpas (नाम-रूपड) which have evolved and are still continuously evolving point, Sankara observes, to something beyond, as their cause; they cannot but indicate the presence of some conditioning activity which must have produced them—

" गुङ्गमुत्पतितं नेदममूलं भविष्यतौति" (क्टा॰ भा॰ quoted in वे॰ भा॰, 4.3.14).

Again, these emerging changes point to some final End (ভর্জ), towards which they are moving; they indicate the final stage, the complete realisation, of the purpose which has created them—

" उदके तसीव जगम्मुलस्य 'विज्ञीयलं' रेद्धीयति"।

It is thus that Sankara states here the fact that the created world—the emerging changes—always carry with them the idea of a purpose as yet unrealised.⁸ The [&]quot; उपाधिनिमित्तास च 'वलुधर्माला'नुपपत्ते " (वे॰ भा॰, 3.2.15).

^{*} The term (विशेष्य used here and elsewhere means the End (as contrasted with the means). It is explained in the Gita-bhasya thus—[&]quot; ক্র যদিব ক্লান দ্বন ক্লানদর্ভা (End) भवति " (মী॰ মা॰, 13. 17).

^{ै &}quot;भैवसृत्यस्यादिश्वतीनां निराकाञ्चार्थल-प्रतिपादनसामध्येनस्ति" (वे॰ भा॰, 4.3.14).

readers are requested to carefully mark the arguments employed by Sankara to establish this important position. He speaks of 'जें य' i.e., Brahman (to be realised), as the final end of realisation—

" ज्ञानफलं भवति "।--

that is to say, Brahman is completely realised in the final stage, and that is the final purpose or end of the created world.¹

This truth is very distinctly explained in the Gita-bhasya-

"मया प्रध्यचलेन 'हतृना चरावशंजगत् विपरिवर्त्तते सर्व्वासु अवस्थासु" । (9.10.)

What do these emerging changes—परिवर्शनः - परिवासः of the world imply? Whatever has been manifested in the world—all its व्यवसार, i. e., all its states, activities, the objects, in fact, everything of the world—all these are for—

"बात्मावगत्यवसानार्थतात् सर्वव्यवहारस्य"...

i. e., "all these move towards the final realisation of the Atma. Brahman is the final End (भवसान), for the realisation of which, these changing manifestations are perpetually moving on.²

This is the purport, Sankara goes on to point out, of the creation mentioned in the Sruti-texts. When the final stage is reached, then and then alone the changing nāma-rūpas (नाम-इपड) will reach the complete realisation of the purpose working behind them. Hence this भानादा viz., this realisation of the final end or purpose is inherent—interwoven—into the structure of the created elements of the world. The creation is meant to show this important truth in the Sruti. It is not meant to show that the underlying Brahman is identical with the world, as if Brahman has no 'nature' of its own to realise.

We had occasion to point out above that in the Vedanta-System, we find mention of the four typical classes of Bijas (ৰীলs); and that these are characterised by growth and development, and this characteristic feature marks them out to be living individuals (লীৰs).¹ In the Gita-bhāṣya, it is stated that they are continuous. This description of the Bijas (ৰীলs) clearly indicates that by them the different grades of finite individuals from the lowest to the highest are meant. Now, these continuously evolving higher and higher grades of the individuals are all interwoven in the Infinite Self (Brahman) which is always present behind them.² In the lower finite individuals, the Infinite is realised unconsciously.

This term बोज is synonymous with the term भूत in the Gita; and the भूतs are described as जीवाधिष्ठतानां in 10.32. Cf. "बीजं मां सर्वभूतानां" (7.10). It is clear therefore that बीजs = भूतs = जीवs.

[&]quot; "सर्व्वितिदं स्वर्विश्व भूतानि गणितमनुविद्य सनुस्थूतं मिय परिनेश्वरि'' (गै॰भा॰, 7.7)। Cf. also: "सम्बं प्राणाः गणित परिनानः पर्यसात् व्युश्वरित गरिमानः विक्ते शिक्षात् व्युश्वरित गरिमानः यसात् व्युश्वरित गरिमानः विक्ते शिक्षात् विक्रियां प्रतिक्षात् प्रतिक्षाति प्रतिक्याति प्रतिक्षाति प्रतिक्षाति प्रतिक्षाति प्रतिक्षाति प्रतिक्षाति

It is only in man that the Infinite is present and is being realised consciously.

According to Sankara, then, this realisation of the Infinite in the world and in the finite human beings in higher and higher forms until the final stage is reached—is the purpose of the creation.

ा Such is the 'nature' or खाभाव—of Brahman—''खाभावादेव सन्मावित''

CHAPTER II

THE PURE EGO AS ACTIVE POWER.

1. The individual ego, as depicted in the Adwaita philosophy, has given rise to several controversial points, as regards its nature and character, in certain quarters. Among other points, the most important controversy has gathered round the question of the 'activity' of the pure Ego. An idea prevails that in the Sankara system the Individual Ego, like Brahman, is merely an "abstract intelligence destitute of activity." How the idea arose we shall try to set forth. It was found out from the Bhásya that Sankara raised a clear voice of warning against ascribing the objective qualities to the subject; that as soon as it acquires an objective content, the "I" passes over into the Me. Ego or subject is that through which we know all; it follows from this that it cannot itself become an object of knowledge. And because the self cannot be known, Sankara treated it, as an "abstract concept, as pure knowledge or intelligence." This idea was strengthened and received an additional force when it was discovered that there were sentences in the Sankara-bhásya itself which unmistakably refuse to allow 'agency' to the Pure Ego. Take for instance such sentences as the following :-

> "न खाभाविकं कर्त्तृ ल' चात्मन: सन्मवित, चिनमीच-प्रसङ्गत्। कर्त्तृत्वखभावले हि चात्मनी, न कर्त्तृत्वा-विमीच: सन्मवित ; चग्ने दिव चौच्चाप्रात्"— विदा॰ भाष्य, 2,3.40.

i.e., The self cannot be an agent; it is not active. If there be agency in the nature of the self, it can never free itself from it—no more than the fire can free itself from its heat. The activity does not really belong to the self, and if we could only realise this, we gain a true conception of the individual self.

Now, the natural consequence of these discoveries in the Sankara-bhásyas was not slow to make its appearance. The conclusion which the critics of the Sankara system drew from these, resolves itself into such a train of thoughts as this:—

"The idea of intelligence dissociated from the idea of activity is an idea which passes from the subjective order to the objective order. The self thus conceived merges necessarily in the universal and it disappears into a pantheistic void......We can only be sure of this pure Ego, not as an object, but as a subject persistently active so long as we have experience. But this activity Sankara denies to the self."

But the self which the critics of the Sankara-system have found out is not the true self at all according to Sankara as we shall presently see. Sankara is reluctant to call this a self at all; he rather wants to call it a non-ego— भगावा.

Sankara not only refuses to allow agency to this self, but he has refused to allow it knowledge also. For, all the elements which constitute this self are not free in their activities; the next term being given by the preceding which determines its action. And the states constituting this self have borrowed their consciousness from the true conscious self which is present behind them.

2. We propose in this chapter to consider carefully the view if in Sankara's system, he regards the Pure Ego merely as an "abstract intelligence," and whether it is active or not. It is needless to say that there is hardly any justification for this belief in the writings of Sankara himself. Let us now proceed to consider what evidence the Bhāṣyas themselves offer which show that the individual Ego has ever been regarded by Sankara as "dissociated from activities."

The finite self is ordinarily regarded as a self-contained entity existing on its own account. It is merely a bundle of passive feelings and states, and possesses a fund of impulses and passions which constitute the source of its physical and mental movements or activities. It is continuous with, and a part of, the external nature which has equipped it with its organs of sense and the nervous system. When the organs of sense come in contact with the external environment (विषयेक्य-उपक्र), the latter evokes certain states and activities in the former, and these actions and reactions constitute the self. This is the actual empirical self. According to Sankara, it is not the real self; and he calls it—

" कर्त्तृत्व-भोजृत्त-विशिष्ट जीवः '' and '' चारमा चपरमार्थः ''।

The agency disclosed in its activities is not the true agency at all; for, all the elements constituting this agency (कर्म् ल) determine, and are determined by, one another in an unbroken series of mechanical causality.3 What this self does at the present moment is but the necessary outcome of his motive and character (प्रकृति) and habit formed in the past—

" एषणा...काम:, येन प्रयुक्त: भवश इव...विहर्मुख:, न खं लोकं प्रतिजानाति ''

^{*} Sankara calls this self as "भूतनावार्श्सर्रेजनित: " and "मनोमयादि-पश्चकोषविश्विष्ट:." This is regarded by him as passive self, and the real self is what underlies it. " करणानि हि मन-भादौनि नियमेन प्रवर्त्तने ; तत्, न भरति चेतनाविति अधिष्ठातिर उपपदाते " (कैन० वा० भा०, !.1).

i.e., he is a slave of impulses and instincts which move in him and sway him hither and thither; these impulses move him to act in the direction of their guidance. He has no eye to look to the other path.

This self is not free to choose the end of his life-

But, Brahman indwells and is revealed in man in the Brahman is revealed in man as infinite ideal infinite ज्ञानेश्वर्य—and it is the moving power. form of infinite " নানীমুঠা" hidden in him—in the form of infinite ideal of truth, beauty and goodness. ¹ These indwelling নানমুঠাs—these Ideals—are gradually being revealed in man in higher and higher form and they are carrying the man to infinite possibilities in future. The infinite Brahman is thus immanent in man and it is for this presence that we do not feel content with our actual situation (विषय-विरक्ति) and seek higher and higher ends.

The ज्ञान-यित्र-सौन्द्यं, etc., as we actually find them manifested in human nature are all imperfect, broken and fragmentary. But the ज्ञानैययं—which lies hidden deep behind in man is infinite and inexhaustible, and hence the two cannot be identified. Yet we identify the two, and the indwelling infinite ज्ञानैययं which constitutes the real self and which is the moving force within us becomes concealed, and the actual human nature as expressed in [&]quot; जीवस्य ज्ञानैश्वर्य-तिरोभावः, देहेन्द्रिय मनीवृद्धिविषयवेदनायोगात्" (वे० सा०, 3.2.6).

[&]quot; सद्यस्य भनपायित्वात्,...उपाधिकतस्यद्प-तिरोभावात् " (वे॰ भा॰, 3.2.35) " प्राकृतविषयविकारविज्ञानैः प्रस्तु प्रमः त्रमः " (कठ॰ भा॰ 2.12), deeds and words is all-in-all to us, and future possibilities are shut out.

But the pursuit of knowledge more and more, the quest of beauty in higher and higher forms which no finite objects of the world can perfectly satisfy, our infinite capacity and work for higher and higher ends, our dissatisfaction with mundane goods—all these prove the presence of Brahman in us in a newer way, such that it was never present in the lower animals in the same manner. Sankara points out—

"The supreme self is revealed in the spirit of man in a higher and superior form. It is for this presence that man ever wants to know more and more, and by mundane means ever to reach what is supra-mundane."

"प्राथान्यात्। किं पुन: प्राथान्यं पुरुषे? — कमीज्ञानाधिकार:। पुरुष एव हि यक्तात्वात्, अर्थित्वात्, अपर्युद्साच — अर्थी, विद्वान्, समर्यः:...पुरुषे त्वेव आविस्तरामात्मा। स हि प्रज्ञानेन सम्पन्नतम: विज्ञानं प्रश्चति अस्तनं...मर्त्तेग्न अस्तरमीचिति । अथ इतरिषां प्रश्नां अस्ता-[रिपासे एव अभिविज्ञानं ''।—

¹ The implication of the term सूसनं is that you cannot keep a man satisfied with the knowledge of to-day, he will seek for the knowledge of to-morrow and so on. स्पर्ने सम्तं—implies, he will seek the supramundane End, through the mundane means;—you cannot keep him content with what is mundane only. We have translated the passage accordingly.

Then again--" पूर्व-पूर्व-प्रवित्तितिथेन, उत्तरीत्तरापूर्व-

i.e., "By higher and higher works and pursuits, man desires to realise higher and higher ends, until all his pursuits are directed to the realisation of the supreme End."

And he further adds that-

"to other animals, their knowledge and action are limited to present eating and enjoyment."

Brahman thus indwells in us as an Ideal or End and this End is the 'higher self'—the real 'nature' of man. This 'nature' underlies all his manifested states and activities. This End or Purpose lying hidden in man carries the man to infinite possibilities in future. To quote a typical illustration 1 from the Vedanta-

As द्विता (a lump of earth) moves to realise its future ideal घट (the earthen jar), which lies hidden in its nature; so the ideal which is inherent in man's nature gradually works out its end.

this end is thus the moving force or the real agent in man-

" सर्वप्रवृत्तीनामात्मावगत्यवसानार्थेतात् " :

i.e., the realisation of Brahman in our self-the ब्रह्मात्मेकल — is the प्रत्यार्थ or the final end of our life.

³ Cf. also—'' चन्यमिदं प्रमाचं...नात: परं किचित् 'चाकाक्च्य' मिल् (क्° भा°, 2.1.14).

[&]quot;ब्रह्मावगति हि पुरुषार्थ:, 'ब्रवगतिपर्यन्तं ' ज्ञानं " (1.1.1).

[&]quot; निष्क एकत्वाद्यवगती सत्यां...पुरुषार्थसमाप्तिवृद्धात्पन्ने: " (4.3.14).

This is called 'पर्यन्त,' i.e., the final End. " ज्ञे यमेव जातं सत् " ज्ञानफर्लं भवति" (गी° भा°, 13.17)।

Now, this 'higher self' or the End is our real self lying behind our states and activities. It is present as Purposive Power or End of our life. It is not a slave like the empirical self, but is the true determining agent. It is not in time-series, but above it. It can introduce a new element or a difference in the time-series. Its actions are not determined by antecedents in time. It can direct the natural courses of the functions of its organs and lead them to the realisation of its own 'purpose'—

" साभाविकात् कार्ध्यकर वप्रवित्तगोचरात् विसुत्तीक्षयः, प्रत्यगाश्मस्रोत स्त्रया प्रवर्त्तयाति" । (वेदा° भाष्य, 1.1.4). "कार्थ-करण-संघातस्य स्त्रभावेन सर्व्यतः प्रवृत्तस्य—सन्धागे एव निरोधः" । (गौ° भा°, 13.7).

3. Here in this connection, we should like to invite our readers' attention to an invaluable opinion of Sankara which occurs frequently in his Bhāṣyas. We mean how Sankara has drawn out a distinction between the respective characteristics of the Intelligent self (चेतन) and the non-intelligent elements of nature (अचेतन). The readers would do well to bear these characteristic features carefully in their minds. Sankara has characterised the चेतन or the Intelligent Self as खार्च (swārtha), that is to say—it exists for itself and it has the purpose or the reason of its existence in itself. The चेतन is always described as खत: चिद्र or निवासिद,—i.e., it is self-existent and self-sufficient and does not depend for its existence on any other thing. In contrast with this characteristic mark of the ৰবন, he has called the মুক্তন or the material elements as স্বাই (Parārtha),—i.e., existing and working for something else which is distinct from them in its nature; or in other words, which work and exist for the 'purpose' of something other than these elements. Sankara has pointed out the fact that the মুক্তন has no purpose of its own—

" चचेतने खार्थांनुपपत्ते:।" (\mathfrak{s}° सा $^\circ$ 4.3.7).

He has thus described the nature of 'purpose' inherent in Brahman—

'' खारमनीऽनन्धाः कामाः''।

"न इिकामयितृ अचेतनमस्ति"।

As our uncontrolled human desires and purposes are dependent on, and determined by, their extraneous stimulating causes; as these, when produced, master us;—such are not the purposes of Brahman, which are মন্ম (ananya) from its nature, i.e., not distinct or separable from the nature of Brahman.

The desires of living beings do not appertain to self, and require motives like virtue, etc., in the accomplishment of objects distinct from the self. But Brahman's wishes or purposes are prompted by no such motives, nor is Brahman influenced by them; because its purposes are not distinguishable from it.²

² These purposes are Divine Ideas which are elsewhere called as सामान्य subsumed under and organised by the highest सामान्य ।—Vide Chap. 1, pp. 60-61, of this book.

To recognise the character of a man—his will—we must find the expression of his will in action. Brahman is best apprehended by our mind through its self-manifestation,—through the manifestation and expression of its purposes in the created world. Apart from its self-manifestation, Brahman for human thought tends to become a metaphysical abstraction. A Divine purpose is constantly working out and gradually developing from within and the world is progressively working out a purpose—a plan which is fulfilling itself in and through the order of nature.

Now, manifested nature and its elements, being प्राचे, are not self-sufficient and independent at all, but are constantly dependent on the self whose purpose they fulfil. They have only an instrumental value;—they are mere means through which the purpose of the self is constantly realised. If you deny this, "what are really पराचे in their nature would themselves become खार्च and would therefore be meaningless"—

" खार्था: सब्बी: प्रवत्तय: व्यर्था: प्रसन्वेरन् " $(\ \, \vec{n}^\circ \ \, \text{भा}^\circ, \, 18.50).$

"Pleasure and pain and the like would, in that case, work and exist for the sake of pleasure and pain and the like"—

"न च देहादाचेतनार्थलं मकां कल्पयितुं। न च सुखार्थं सुखं, दुःखार्थं वा दुःखं"।

From these observations of Sankara, it irresistibly follows that the world and the differentiations visible in the world are to be regarded as a means or instruments for the realisation of the Divine purpose; that a Divine purpose is realising itself gradually through the differences or stages of nature.

The important truth just noted can also be gathered from Sankara's comment on the Vedānta-sutra (4.3.14). In this commentary, Sankara shows Brahman to be the supreme goal or end. When this goal is reached, all our desires are satisfied and no further desire arises beyond this—

''न भूय: काचित् त्राकाङ्का उपजायते, पुरुषार्थसमाप्ति-वडुग्रत्यत्ते:"।

Here, in Brahman,—the end of human aspirations finds its final satisfaction. Thus the Vedāntic चेतन ब्रह्म, is to be always thought of as a Purpose or End. 1

But Sankara observes in the same commentary that it is otherwise with the created elements of the world—that is to say, the idea of the final End, the idea of the final realisation—is not to be expected within the sphere of created nature and in its elements. For, this idea lies beyond them. As the process of the world is progressively moving 2 to the final goal which lies beyond it, no one of its elements can give us the final satisfaction. This remark implies that nature is an enasterial (parārtha)—a means—for the realisation of the final goal or end; for, it gives rise to the idea of something which lies as its source and which also lies as its final goal towards which it is moving.

"नैवसुत्पच्यादियुतीनां निराकाञ्चल — प्रतिपादनसामधीमस्ति" ;—

these definite individual beings are qualitatively distinct in our consciousness and are all relative realities. These relative realities can be conceived only in connection with an absolute Reality. Sankara has shown that 'those who wish to produce certain effects, such as curds, jars, etc., employ for their purpose certain determined causal substances, such as milk, clay, etc. Each causal substance has a certain capacity for some particular effects only and not for other effects;—this capacity is the certain Power of the cause.' We have seen that the effects are the means for the realisation of the End or the purpose working within, and each of the definite causes are but the proximate ends and these are all subservient to a single ultimate end.² It shows an immanent unifying power realising purpose;—it is a power differentiating its parts from within and making the parts to serve as means for the realisation of a purpose.

We find therefore, that all the elements of human organism also exist and work together for the realisation of the purpose of the self which controls and directs them.² Sankara has observed—

"The director is inferred by a logical necessity from the activity manifested by the ear and others combined, such as deliberation, volition, etc., inured for the benefit of something distinct from them all (ear, etc.). As things combined and organised for a common purpose or end exists for the use of other thing not so combined, we argue there is a director of the ear, etc., and for whose use the whole lot exists and has been combined." Each of these fulfils [&]quot;सब्बें हि कार्थकरणजातं 'पारार्थ्येन' संहतं नाम्हपासमक-मितद्देव " (प्र॰ सा॰, 4.8).

We invite our reader's attention to the Bhasya on the Kena-Upanishad, 1. Here Sankara calls the true self as the Purpose or End which directs our impulses, organs, manas, etc., , for the realisation of itself 'इताकाय रकामादियेव मन मादि प्रेवशित्स रवादि'। In the भाषा of this Upanishad this self is described and proved as अवस्थित, i.é., a directive or purposive Power.

a function and in fulfilling it, each contributes to the realisation of the purpose—पर्य—of the cause within. Sankara says—i.e., Mutually dependent activities for the purpose of a common object are not possible without an independent intelligent power.

" एका येंडितित्वे न संहननं भन्तरिय चेतनं न भवति" —(तै° भा°, 2.7).

The following observations of Sankara will help us in arriving at the same conclusion:—

"We are not told by scripture that the final welfare of man (प्रशाद) depends on the scriptural passages about the creation and the like. All the passages setting forth creation and so on only subserve the purpose of the realisation of Brahman. The passages about Brahman modifying itself into the form of this world is merely to be applied as a means for the realisation of the absolute Brahman, but does not bring about an independent result." 1

These remarks tell us that we are never to understand the universe of nāma-rūpa as mere self-existing (खतन)

सन्ती कीविन्त ।...यस घसंडतस्य 'चर्थे' प्राचापानादिः सर्त्वं स्थापारं कुर्वन् वत्तते संडतः सन्, स ततीऽन्यः सिडः " (जठ° भा°, 55).

N.B.—This shows that the Vedantic Brahman and the individual self as well are not abstract intelligences, as many seem to hold, but they are conscious organising unities or powers.

[&]quot;न चार्य सन्त्र।दि-प्रपचः प्रतिपाद्यिषितः; न चि तत्प्रतिवदः कथित् पुक्षार्थः दच्चते ...दर्भयति च सन्त्रादिप्रपच्य ब्रह्मप्रतिपक्त्येताम्" (दे॰, 1.4.14).

Of. " यत्तव चमलं त्रृयते जगदाकार परिचामित्यादि...तत् वश्वदर्मनीपायत्वं न विनियुच्यते, न तु खतन्त्रं फलाय कच्याते " (2.1.14).

changes, but as movement to a definite goal—a progress; not as becoming merely, but as being that is becoming. The changing elements (विकारs) are the means serving the purpose of the being of the cause—the Power—working from within. They are sustained by the cause, so that in their evolution and interaction they conspire to realise the Divine Purpose.

The above discussion clearly brings home to our mind the fact that in as much as the self is held by Sankara to be a purposive Power (आयं), and all other objects and elements besides the self are regarded as a means (परायं) for the realisation of the purpose of the self, it follows that we must use the actions of our organs, passions, impulses in a way that our highest purpose may be realised through them.¹ The self is therefore the true agent.

(a) We have already come to learn 2 that in the Commentaries of Sankara one fact cannot fail to stand out prominently. We mean the fact that a finite individual, be it a thing or a self, possesses a distinct 'nature' of its own. It is impossible for an attentive reader to escape this fact. This nature Sankara holds to be permanent or first in the sense that it maintains its unity and preserves its identity in the successive changes of its manifested states and activities which it underlies. This nature, Sankara is careful to point out, is not at all dependent on anything beyond, or external to it; neither is it produced, like its states or activities, by an external stimulus or the environment with which it is put into relation. 1 It not only retains its unity in its changing states, it continues to live in each of its successive states evoked from it. But such is not the case with its states and activities. These are transient and impermanent; these are produced on the occasion of the action of the environment.2 But they are not produced out of nothing (परत्); there must be something underlying them, out of which they are produced or manifested.⁸ This underlying nature is called by Sankara सन्प (swarūpa) or धर्मा (Dharma) or सभाव (Swabhava). Sometimes the word सामान (Sámánya) is used to denote this nature. Throughout his system, the term कारण or cause invariably refers to this nature. As it transcends its states, it is sometimes called कृटस (Kūtastha).

Here is how he describes this nature, and contrasts it with its states:—

"The Real in a thing is that which does not depend on any other thing and (तैति $^{\circ}$ भाष्य, 2.8).

Sankara's elaborate discussions in his Vedanta-bhásya (2.1) on the relation between the cause and its effects bring into prominence these important truths. The কাৰে or the nature of the individual things or beings maintains its identity and continues to live in their successive effects brought about by the action of the external stimulus (কাৰে-আবাৰ). These effects or states or activities do not touch or affect the nature of the cause—

"भवस्थात्रय-साची एक: भव्यभिचारी, भवस्थात्रयेष व्यभिचारिषा न संस्पृश्चते"। (वेदा०भाषा, 2.1.9)।

[&]quot;न तु पुन: पदार्थों \cdots देशान्तरे काला।न्तरे वा खं खं स्वभावं जहित" (क्षेन $^\circ$ वा $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 3.12)। "क्षाभाविकी द्रव्यख्यभावत एव सिद्धा \dots सापि न कालान्तरे व्यक्षित्ररित देशानरे वा।" (मा $^\circ$ का $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 4.9)। underlying The 'nature' cannot be resolved into its activities or states. This nature is the true

(b) The changing states or activities cannot, Sankara takes particular care to observe, constitute the 'nature' of things. For, these are always changing and transient, but the underlying nature is not liable to change. 1 Among other arguments used by Sankara to prove this nature, the following may be specially noted here. Sankara points out-

> Every individual object, every individual self, exists for itself, as well as for others (खडप and समाधि-६प). In other words, each individual has a substantive and adjectival The one, Sankara observes, existence. cannot be reduced into the other. an individual, in order to exist for others, must first of all exist for itself. If an individual does not exist for itself-has no nature of its own-how can it come into relation with others and how can others evoke from it its states and activities? You cannot say that finite individuals exist only by reference to something beyond them. Things cannot be merely adjectival to one another. The same identical Devadatta (६वदस) comes to be designated differently in relation to different objects with which he comes into connection, but Devadatta does not, says Sankara, lose his own nature, does not abandon his identity, when he is thus designated differently.—

"न च खाभाविकी धर्म एव नाक्षि पदार्थांनां इति यक्षं वक्त्ं ... म च खभावात् चन्वत नित्यं बहुपयितं यक्यं"। "न डि क्रियानिवंत्तः चर्यः नित्यीदष्टः" (वर्°सा०. 4.4.6).

"एकस्यापि खडप-वाश्चार्त्पापेषया धनेकबद्धप्रत्ययदर्भनात्। एकोऽपि सन् दैवदत्तः, खरूपं सन्धि-दप्ध धपेत्य, धनेकबद्धप्रत्ययभाक् भवितः"——— etc. etc.
(वेदा° भाष्य, 2.2.17).

Making his position thus secure, Sankara now goes on to argue that the nature of the individual cannot be resolved into its states and activities, in as much as the nature maintains its identity and continuity in its changing and successive states and activities. He observes that—

"न डि वियेषद्यैनमः त्रेण वद्धन्यत्व' भवति···स एवेति प्रत्यांभ ज्ञानात्'' (वेदः° भाषा, 2. 1. 18),

"An individual, simply because a new difference has emerged—certain particular states and activities have been produced in it,—does not lose its own character and becomes something else."—

Elsewhere, he teaches that-"You will never meet with any particular successive states which are not interwoven in and sustained by, the underlying continuity of their real 'nature'—

''सामान्यानस्विद्धानां विशेषायामद्येनात्''

(so wio, 1.6.1 and 2,4.7).

Yet, such is the perversity of the ordinary human mind that it forgets or ignores the presence and operation of the true self which underlies its successive states, and takes the self to consist entirely in its mutually exclusive states and activities connected by a mechanical causal law. Sankara says that this is done by the influence of avidya or our natural ignorance. The aggregate of these states and activities is the empirical self of the ordinary ignorant people and this is the only self to them. This self is stated by Sankara as the—

''कर्'ल-भीक्त,ल-विधिष्ट जीव''।

The nature or the underlying ext of the individuals, as we have shown above, is the real self and it is transcendental or new, to which its states and activities belong as to a centre. It is free in its activities, because it is above time and it has no antecedent in time to determine its actions. This agency is the true agency in the system of Sankara. Out of its own resources which are inexhaustible, this real self can introduce an entirely new element in time, and it can chalk out a new path for itself, and initiate a new movement. Its vision is kept confined to its future infinite possibilities, and it is moving on and on in the direction of its Divine goal, for which reason it is called by Sankara as anima (i.e., it is essentially Brahman in its nature).

Wherever Sankara denies agency to the self, it is always the passive agency (if such term can be used) of the empirical self, because all its manifested activities are, as shown above, mechanically determined in an unbroken series in time. Sankara never denies anywhere the free active agency of the underlying real self.¹

The Self is a Real Agent.

5. We shall now proceed more particularly to show that Sankara regarded the real self as an active power, and its activity is "reflected in all our sensitive, ideational and in other aspects of our experience." The following discussion will bring out the two-fold sense, in Sankar's system, in which the term 'agency' has been used, and will, we also hope, bring into prominence the fact that the Pure Ego is an active power, when it gains the perception of the external world.

The underlying 'nature' is a seat of power.

(a) It is revealed in sensitive and intellectual activities.

Sankara thus describes-

"Whenever any of our organs functions, there are always two kinds of activities simultaneously present there. Of these, the one is visible and the other invisible; one is transitory and dependent, and the other is permanent and independent; the one works in time, the other is beyond time. There are two visions—

''हे हष्टी—दिष्टिरिति हिविधा भवति, लोकिकी, पारमार्थिकी च''—

the first kind is an action evoked in the mind through the affection of the organ of eye. This activity is transitory in its character; it appears, it disappears. It is a change produced, when the eye is stimulated into activity by an external object with which it has come into contact: and it vanishes when the contact ceases to operate. But underlying this activity here, there is an eternal and permanent vision of the self, and this vision or activity constitutes its real nature, -as heat and light constitute the nature of the fire. This vision of the self cannot be said to be produced, neither can it be said to be liable to disappear. The former vision of the eye, as soon as it is produced, is found to be invariably permeated or pervaded by the latter vision or the permanent activity of the self which is constantly present and operative behind it. 1 Thus the two kinds of vision or activity appear blended together, and the ignorant unable to discriminate the one from the other, are liable to misrepresent the activity of the self as actually produced and as actually disappearing, with the appearance and disappearance of the changing activity of the eye. Hence, although the activity of the self is eternal and unchanging, it is held to be seeing

[&]quot;चयमपि चारमा चिवपरिलुप्तस्त्रभावया हत्या निस्थया द्रष्टेति उचिते " न तु मारमनोऽन्यः दर्येन प्रकारोऽकि"— इ भा°, 4.3,23, when the vision of the eye is excited, and to be not seeing when the vision vanishes. This is also the case with the functions of the other organs of sense."

(Brih. Bhāsya, 3.4.2 and Ait. Bhāsya, 4.1.)

Now, what do these remarks show? They unmistakably bring to light the important fact that in the perception of the external objects what really perceives is the true self and that it is this self which exhibits its real agentship (कर्ने व) in its activities of comparison, discrimination and assimilation. Sankara holds that there can be no perception of a definite object unless there is an active comparison of similars and dissimilars—

''निष्कृष्य समानासमानजातीयेग्यो'''इदं तत्' इति निर्द्दि छते''— (तैस्ति° भाषा, 2.6.)

In the Brihadāranyaka and in the Vedānta Bhāsyas also, Sankara thus briefly describes the activity of the underlying self in the act of perception:—

"I happen to receive two distinct kinds of sense-impressions when somebody touches me by his leg and next by his hand. There is as yet no discrimination, until the self energetically sets to work to compare one kind of sensation with the other, and differentiate one from dissimilar other sensa-These activities of comparison, reflection, discrimination and assimilation are all operations of our intellect (इदि) which is a mere instrument in the hands of the self; for all these activities are indeed my present changes: but these activities discover or reveal the active self as the subject from whom they issue. An activity which distinguishes, an activity which carries the work of comparison and raises the sense-presentations to the level of discriminative consciousness cannot be a mere item of passive feelings. By these activities the Ego is discovered as the energetic source from which the actions issue—

"त्वङ्माचे च क्रुती विवेक-प्रतिपत्ति: ?" 1.5.3. (इ° भा°)

Then again, so long as the self does not direct its attention to the changes received, they can never become the objects of our knowledge. It is for this that Sankara remarks—

"चन्यत्रमना चभूवं, नापश्चम्, etc. etc.," (वे° भा°, 2.3.32.)

All these reveal the presence and operation of an active self underlying these feelings and activities, which maintains its identity in its constant movement 1 among similar and dissimilar elements, and to which both the past and the present belong. We find Sankara remarking—

"न हि चन्यहर चन्यः स्वरंति, प्रतिसन्धाति

वा"। "तेनेद सहयं— तेनेति हरू-स्वरणं

——इति इयायत्तलात् साहस्यस्य...

सहययो इंयो वेस्तुनी: यहौतु रेकस्य

प्रभावात्, साहस्यनिमित्तंप्रतिसन्धान मिति

Cf. "चगमत् में मनीऽन्यच, साम्प्रतच स्थिरीक्षतं। एवं यी वित्त चीडत्तं सीऽइनित्यवधारय (वाकाडत्ति, 21)"

The identity of the self which persists through its changing states is implied in any exercise of memory. "To know a flower by scent, we must remember a prior experience of it and discriminate it from other appeals to the same sense."

"भक्तनदोऽद्राचं द्रदंपश्चामीति च,— पूर्वीत्तरदर्शिन एकखित्रसित कथं प्रत्यभिज्ञा-प्रत्ययःस्यात् ? "

These observations of Sankara prove that to him, the real character of the Pure Ego is not merely "a being," or "a knowledge"—but an "active power" and a source of activities. And this source cannot be phenomenalised; for, in its absence there would be no perception at all.

In connection with this subject, we crave our reader's indulgence for the liberty of quoting a few other passages bearing on this important point.

- 6. In the Gita (Chap. XIII, 12-13), Brahman's nature is described as neither sat, nor asat—

 (b) It is revealed in apparently possessing no definite characteristics. Now, the question arises—Is atmated to be regarded, then, as a mere non-entity, a non-existent something? For, if there is no positive mark to characterise its nature, it is as good as non-existent—asat. Now, we invite our reader's attention to the reply which Sankara suggests to this very pertinent question.—
 - "No, you cannot say that Ātmá is non-existent or asat (प्रत्). For, there are indicative marks by the help of which we are enabled to infer—we are assured of—its nature. What are these indications? To prevent the supposition that the Ātmá (बाका) must be a mere void or non-entity (यून) the Gita proceeds to teach that the Ātmá exists as—(1) the inner self (प्रव्यास्मा) and as—(2) the source of all activities of the senses and the like."

Sankara points out-

"Krisna proves, by way of inference, the existence of Ātmá as the inner self thus:— There must be self-conscious principle (power) behind the insentient elements in activity, such as the physical body and the senses; for, we invariably find self-conscious principle underlying all insentient objects in activity, such as carriage in motion. Hands, feet and the like constituting the limbs of all bodies in all places, derive their activity from the energy inherent in the knowable (भागा) and, as such, they are the marks of its existence and operation."

Sankara also says—that "Ātmá (भाषा) reveals its nature through the upādhis (उपाधि) of external and internal senses, through the functions of all the senses, viz., determination, thoughts, desires, hearing, speech, etc., etc., i.e., the knowable (भाषा) functions as it were through the functions of the senses. But does it actually function? The Sruti implies the knowable has the power to accommodate itself to the varying functions of all the senses.....not that it actually possesses swift motion and such other activities." This is shown also by Sankara elsewhere by his remarks—

"सत्तामात्र एव कर्तृत्वं, न तु त्र्यापृततया"।

It does not imply that the self is to be regarded as merely 'a being.' It does not mean that the self is not a power. It simply implies that this power cannot be phenomenalised or reduced to its manifested activities. This expression has been chosen to guard against the supposition that the self is subject or liable to transient changes or families, and to show that it is a निर्द्धिकार power.1 This power is constantly present and operative behind the activities. as their free active source or seat-of which these are but partial manifestations, and these manifestations can never exhaust this inexhaustible source. These manifested activities are the indicative marks of their underlying power. In the Chandogya-bhasya, the nature of the self is actually called "सामर्थ" or the source of power (8,12.4). And it is characterised asi.e., the source cannot be resolved into the activities of the senses and the like, but is present and operative in and through them, and is above them. This important truth is expressed in the Vedanta-bhásya by the expression—

"करणव्यापारेषु श्रव्यापृतः, तहिलचणः"

"न कारणस्य काय्यौत्मलं" (वे $^{\circ}$ 2.1.9).

 $^{(}$ केन $^{\circ}$ वा $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$, 1.2).

[&]quot;विक्रियादिविशेषरहितस्य भाकानी मन भादि-प्रवृत्ती निमित्तलं"

Cf. "भनापत्रविकार: सन् भयस्कान्तवदेव यः। वुद्धादीन् चालयेत्, प्रत्यक्-सी ς इनित्यवभारय" (वाकार्त्तत, १२)। Vide वे $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 2.2.2, that is to say, the underlying power (cause) cannot be reduced to, and identified with, its manifested, actual activities (effects), because this source is inexhaustible and, as such, no one of its manifestations can fix it in a rigid form and be regarded as final.

It is the influence of Avidyā alone which, as Sankara tells us, is responsible for this erroneous identification. If the cause cannot be resolved into, or identified with, its effects: if the true nature of the individual self maintains its identity through its successive changes; if it is by avidyā that we confound the underlying unity with its multiple states and activities; -it follows, as the night follows the day, that all activities which we find in the phenomena must be traced to their underlying self or the unity-as their source. Had Sankara reduced, like the Pantheists, the Causal Reality into its successive activities and states, then of course for the source of these activities we must seek the phenomena alone. But Sankara has repeatedly remarked that when an individual being or thing assumes different forms or phases in consequence of its connection with the things outside it, it does not lose its identity-it does not become something else entirely different from its own nature-

"न इ विवेषदर्भनमात्रेण व इतन्यतं भवतिस एवेति प्रत्यभिज्ञानात् ; (वेदा° भाष्य)।—2.1.18.

It still maintains its unity, preserves its identical nature in and through these successively changing phases or differences. We must therefore look for the source of all phenomenal activities, according to Sankara, to the nature of the individual thing or the self which underlies these activities, and continues to operate through them unaffected by them.

- 7. As in the intellectual, so also in our moral experience, the operations of an active
 (c) It is revealed underlying self cannot be abolished
- in ethical and religious or negated. We, here, briefly describe Sankara's method in the selection of the ends in our moral sphere.

In the Katha-bhāsya, Sankara explains this method thus:—

In his system, Brahman is both transcendent and immanent. If it be of purely transcendental nature, all possibility of comprehending Him would be shut out for man. He would be a remote and abstract being. But, fortunately, He is also immanent in nature and in man, and through this revelation, man can comprehend His 'nature' to a certain extent. Man seeks the realisation of the End inherent in his own nature. But if he seeks this end merely in the external mundane order, he will not find it there—

"योहि वहिमुँख: प्रवर्तते पुरुष:, इष्टं मे
भूयादिनिष्टं में माभूदिति ; न च तच बात्यन्तिकं पुरुषार्थेलभते"।
(वेदा° भा°, 1.1.4)।

For, outward nature, as it is, cannot be regarded as complete and self-sufficient. The rational and ethical human being seems to be the goal of outward nature.

Sankara teaches-

"विषयसैव.....संक्षाग्राहकलेन संस्थानान्तरं करणं नाम"— (इष्ट $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 2.4.11).

Nature has supplied man with his senses and the nervous system, by which he is put into relation with the world.¹ The more his organs and his mind are developed, he is able more and more to realise the grandeur of the universe. He must therefore seek his end within his own nature. The infinite Divine जाने चयं—the Ideal of truth and beauty, etc., is revealed in man, and man is endowed with the capacity to realise it. But if man seeks the जाने चयं as it is found actually present in the human beings, and regards this as the final end, he will be disappointed. For, the in-dwelling जाने चयं मिल-सील्यं is transcendental and it cannot be identified with the actual जाने चयं का s working in the human beings. He must therefore seek the जनत-मिलसील्यं in the future possibilities of man. It is progressively revealing in man and will reach perfection in future.

"Two Ends," Sankara writes—" one mundane and the other transcendental—come to man indiscriminately for his choice. All men are propelled by these two goods according as one wishes for mundane prosperity, or the supreme happiness. These two are opposed and conflicting in their nature to each other. They are therefore not possible to be pursued by the same individual at the same moment. One who (pursues the mundane good and regards this as the true end of his life, misses the true end of man. These two are not easily distinguishable by persons of poor intelligence and of irresolute mind. The truly wise man examines both the pleasant and the good—the mundane and the supra-mundane ends—as a flamingo separates milk and water; and having considered in his mind the relative weight of the two courses, divides them both and selects only the supreme end as preferable to the mundane ends. But the man of poor intelligence incapable of such discrimination, pursues the lower good, such as—cattle, sons, position, wealth, etc., for the purpose of gratifying his pleasures of sense."

Here again, the discrimination between the higher and the lower good, the comparison of the relative worth of the two courses, the rejection of the one and the selection of the other and the pursuing of the same until the supreme end is perfectly realised—all these activities distinctly reveal the presence and operation of an energetic self, not as a "mere being," or a "mere knowledge"—but as an active power.

In spite of such clear expression of his views, is it not doing a great injustice to Sankara's system to hold that Sankara's pure Ego is not a persistent activity? We shall further speak on this supreme end later on.

- 8. Plants and trees are looked upon in the school of
- (d) It is revealed in the construction of plant organism and animal organism.

Sankara as a kind of lower organism. This school admits the existence and evolution of four kinds of organism, viz.—" सेटज, मख्डन, डिड्डिंग and जराय ज,"1

Now, within even the organism of the plants, says

i.e. Those born in perspiration, etc., that which is born from the egg, that which is born from seed or which shoots out; and that which is born from the womb.

Sankara, is the constant operation of an active self sha and its Power is to be inferred from the incessant movement of the sap (रस) within the body (i.e., its plasticity) of the plants and from the gradual growth and development of the plant through its successive stages, till the full development of the tree is reached.

Sankara in his commentary on the Chandogya Upanisad and in other places has distinctly expressed his views as to the impossibility of regarding any of the stages of the plant development as separate and self-sufficient (अन्य) from the process of development of the plant as a whole. stage of sprout (पद्भावस्था) is seen to arise after the destruction or disappearance of its antecedent stage, viz., the stage of seed (वीजावस्था); but that does not, Sankara tells us, prove that non-existence or पान is the cause of the sprout (The future possibility of the tree which is the final end 2 is present in its seed-stage and other subsequent stages and this it is which is the real cause which has successively operated in bringing the plant to its final stage or full development. In the Brihadāraņyaka bhāsya (1.2.1), he explains his theory of causality with the help of the illustration of स्विका (a lump of earth) and its successive development into

s That it is present as a future end has been expressed by Sankara in the phrase— चनागता[थ प्रवस्ति प: (इ.° 1.2.1). चर्छ is the end, towards which the चर्ची (i.e., the causal substance, स्वित्ता, in the present illustration) strives. For, the potter for the purpose of constructing घट, gave the स्वित्ता its successive shapes. [We shall further elaborate the idea in the next chapter.]

This is to be regarded as a typical illustration which holds good in all cases of causal development, in the light of the rules given in the Brahma-Sūtras, II. 1.14-20.

"खेन भविष्यद्भूषेण घटी विद्यते" ∤...
"घटस्य प्रागभाव इति, न घटखडपमेव प्राग्नुत्पत्ते नौसौति" ।——
(इष्ट्र° भा°, 1.2.1.)

In this way, the end is present in the cause from the very beginning and it is this end which gradually carries the real nature of the cause through its successive stages, until it is fully realised in the last stage. He says—

"बसित चर्थितया प्रवृत्तिने दृष्टा"।— (Ibid.)

To realise this end or purpose, the movement of the causal substance had begun in the past and this continues in the present, until it reaches its final realisation in future.

If we keep this teaching before our view, we shall be able to comprehend the real significance of the fact as to why in Sankara's system, the effect or the end is stated to be wind (i.e., no other than) from its cause. To understand the true nature of the cause, we must see it realised successively through all its stages of manifestation up till the final stage, and no one of its stages can, therefore, be separated from it and regarded as something we (other than that 'nature').

- 9. In the human organism also, in the similar manner, it is the self as an active power which, for the realisation of its purpose inherent in it (বামেইন has built up the body. It has brought into being certain elements within it and combined and organised them in such a way that one and all co-operate to realise a common purpose—
- (e) It is revealed in the construction of human organism.

''ऐन्द्रियकायेष्टाः संडतैः कार्य्य-करणैः निर्म्मर्ष्यं मानाः इय्यन्ते । तत्र एकार्यवृत्तित्वेन संडननं, नालरेण चैतनमसंडतं सम्भवति।'' (तैत्ति° भाष्य, 2.7.)

In the Katha-bhāsya, similar observations are found-

'''सार्थेन' चसंइतेन परेख केनचित् जगयुक्तं संइतानां (i.e., परार्थानां) चबस्थानं न इष्टं। यस्य चसंइतस्य 'चयें' प्राचापानादिः सम्बं व्यापारं कुर्व्यन् वर्त्तते, संइतः सन्, स ततीऽन्यः।'' 1

that is to say,—the self which is खाएँ (self-existing and self-working and having the 'reason' or 'purpose' of its being in itself) and which is चन (i.e., which transcends) from these elements,—has combined them with a view to realise its own purpose through them, and thus the organism has been built up. 1

The elements and the senses (and their activities) are called परार्थ, because these are the means or mere ¹ The terms खार्थ (Swertha) and प्राप्ट (Parartha) have been explained before, in the beginning of this chapter. Sankara has laid down this as a general rule that wherever there is a combination and combined activity, there must be an underlying power which bas combined the elements for the realisation of its purpose. ''खार्थेन चर्च केनचित चप्रको संदत्तानासवस्थान न इष्ट''' (काउ भाष्ट्र)। instruments through which the purpose of the self is realised.—

" देक्केन्द्रियादीनां यत् खरूपधारचं..... पारार्थेन निमित्तभूतेन ''तत् चैतन्यात्मक्रतनेव।'' (गी॰ भा॰, 13.22.)

पाराध्ये is the निमित्त here; that is to say, the realisation of its final end is the निमित्त or the impelling occasion, and the building up of the body and its successive developments are चैतन्यासक्रतमेव, i.e., are brought about by the agentship of the self.

Can a clearer exposition of the theory go further? That the self is an active power is thus everywhere shown by Sankara.

10. In the Vedānta-Sutra and in the Upanishads, Brahman

Brahman—a seat of power revealed as prime-mover of Prāṇa in which it is realised to be. is described as NUW NUW: (i.e., it is the Prāṇa of the prāṇa). That is to say,—Brahman is the underlying power of Práṇa (NUW), it is the controlling and directing power which underlies the Prāṇa-Sakti (प्राचमित्रा). This Prāṇa-Sakti (प्राचमित्रा), in Sankara's system, has been held to be the first manifestation of Brahman's nature. Held by the underlying power and sustained by it, this Prāṇa has differentiated itself into the form of the objects of the world and this differentiation is always going on. Brahman, in Sankara's system, is not a characterless being; it has a distinct nature, a character, a सूर्प (swarūpa), स्थान (swabhāva) of its own, and this nature underlies the differentiations of the Pran-Sakti (प्राचमात्त्र), untouched and unaffected by them-

- ''नामद्पाथानसंस्ष्टं,'' ''नामद्पाथाननः,''
- " नामकपाध्यांविलचणं " तथापि तयोनिंग्योंदू "- all these refer to the same truth.

As Brahman is both a transcendental and immanent principle, it is revealed in the world as the differentiations of Prāṇa, but still it is not resolved into or identified with them, but maintains its own unity or its own nature in them. This has been beautifully expressed in a passage in the Ishā-bbāsya.

'Held and sustained by the underlying Brahman—a चेतन power—the Prāna has differentiated itself—externally as the activities of heat, light as exhibited by the objects—the sun, the fire, etc., and internally as the physical and mental activities of the sentient beings.'

Elsewhere, the underlying principle of $Pr\bar{a}na$ is called Antaryāmī (असरीमी), i.e., the sustaining power which controls and directs the Prāṇa-Sakti and its differentiation.

In the Vedanta bhāsya, one of the distinguishing characteristics of the Ātmā is stated as भाषचिंहा, i. e., the control and direction of the Prāņa, or which sets Prāṇa to work.

11. One Vrittikāra reduced Brahman or the unity into the differentiations of nāma-rūpa (নাম্ব্ৰ).

Pantheism refuted.-Finite self is not a mere phase of Pantheistic whole.

In this view, Brahman was the whole and the differentiations of the nāmarūpa including the finite individual selves were looked upon as parts of that whole—as modes of its self-expression—as mere reproductions of the whole. Reducing the unity into the plurality, the Vrittikāra yet held, quite inconsistently no doubt, both of them to be real. This was a kind of pantheism current in the time of Sankara.

Sankara has, in several parts of his commentaries, taken particular care to refute this opinion of the Vrittikāra. He argues that when the differences emerge, the underlying unity does not and cannot become reduced into them. The unity does not, as the plurality arises—as the differentiations of nāma-rūpa arise,—become something else, losing its own nature in them—

ADWAITA PHILOSOPHY

It retains its unity, its own character, its separate substantial life, behind these differences. In criticising Vrittikāra's opinion, Sankara shows that when the unity is thought to be entirely reduced to multiplicity, the former cannot retain its distinct character—the separate life of its own. For, it is now to be found present in the form of many; it has now become composed of 'parts- भनेकात्मक.' The unity, of which the Vrittikara still speaks, is an abstract nothing—a mere empty logical abstraction. For, it has no existence except in the multiplicity, because it has no nature by which it is recognisable apart from the many. It is a contentless abstract idea in general. Hence, argues Sankara, it cannot be held to be real. It is a mere unity of collection, an aggregate of parts. And the parts—the differences of which the whole is a mechanical aggregate are disconnected parts with no organising principle to connect them. The parts—the differences—the multiplicity cannot also, in this view, be held to be real. For, mere differences with no real organising unity behind them would be an unreality. There are mere differences. haphazard changes—with no purpose, no plan, no end to govern them. And Sankara asks-how can such partsdifferences—stand with nothing to connect them ?—

"न डि 'निरारमकं' कि चित्
व्यवद्वाराय भवकत्यते ;
न डि रज्ज्, सपौदयोऽपि
'निरास्पदा' भवन्ति''।
" भारमना 'विनिक्षुंक्तं' नामकपादि

The finite selves, too, being mere phases of an indeterminate whole would have no character, no real life, of their own. They would be liable to be driven, like a ship without a rudder on the bosom of a stormy sea, by the gust of each impulse and passion which find them. Mere parts, mere differences, unrelated to, and separated from, any organising unity behind them are, in the opinion of Sankara, unreal.—

" सदायाना सत्यतं, सतोऽन्यते भनृततं"। "न कारणीपष्टन्यमन्तरेण भविभंसमानं कार्यं स्थातु-सुत्सहते"।

In this way Sankara, in his criticism of Vrittikāra's theory, has shown that neither unity nor multiplicity can be held to be real. Both of them must be declared false (अस्य).

Sankara again asks, if one is reduced to many, how can both be held to be real? One and the same self cannot, he says, be regarded as—possessed of qualities (many) and also devoid of all qualities (one). There would thus arise mutual contradiction (विषय की समयायिन) 1 Yet such absurd supposition would be the irresistible consequence of the theory of Vrittikāra who regarded both to the real, But this absurdity does not at all touch the position of Sankara. In the earlier part of this Chapter we have shown that the Infinite is present in the finite individual and that is the true self. It is present as an end—a possibility—which is the guiding energy of his life. It is this self which in relation with other individuals and the environment becomes manifested as the qualities and states of the finite self. When these states and qualities are erroneously separated from the underlying self and treated as a self-existing and independent reality, these become unreal. But under no circumstances can these differences (many) or changes remain separated from the self, because they are to be taken as manifestations of the self through which it is gradually realising itself.²

For this Sankara has said—"सतीई दियो: सन्बन्धः, न सदसती रसतीवी" (वि भा°, 2.1.18). Hence the future effect (end) exists in the nature of the cause

³ This is the celebrated 'Sat-kāryya-vāda' (सत्कार्धवाद) of the Vedanta Philosophy. The effects or changes produced reveal the nature of the cause. In the Māndukya-Bhāsya Sankara has told us that it is the manifestations which throw light on that which is manifested. The nature of the underlying reality is to be read in the manifestations. If, therefore, what is revealed is taken to be unreal—non-existent—then it can come into no relation with the underlying Reality. For, to be related there must be two terms of relation (च्यायत्ताल सम्बन्धस) which must be both real (न सदसती रसतीवी). Otherwise, the causal Reality would, as भानन्दगिर explains the idea, itself prove to be unreal, and thus Brahman would be an unreality. "कार्यन इ जिक्न कारणनद्वा-जानार्थल स्विभ्यतीनां। तचेदसद्भवेत् न तैन कारणन्य सेन्यन्यभिर्ति—भारदेव कारणमिष स्वात्।"

N. B.—The changes cannot be separated from the cause and treated as something self-existing. For this important fact, compare—

[&]quot;चैतन्याव्यतिरिकेनैव कला: जायमानासिष्ठन्त्रा: प्रखीयमानास सर्व्यदा लत्त्यंनी" (प्र⁰ भा°, 2.6).

[&]quot;यस च यंखादात्मलाभः भवति, स तेन चप्रविभक्ती दृष्टः, यंथा घटादीनी सदा" (क्र सां , 1.6,1).

The connection of the finite individuals with one another shows that they all depend on a common ground—an ever-present connecting principle (भाषान्त्र) bringing all into closest interaction. Relations imply the interaction of the individuals and, we have seen, these individuals are something for themselves (सद्य), ere they can be something to one another (सद्याय-द्य). The individuals have their determinate character all elicited through interaction with other individuals and the whole within which they exist. Brahman is immanent in all individual centres, yet does not reduce these centres to mere phases of its own, as it is Transcendental also and therefore distinguished from the elements it connects.

In the theory of Sankara, therefore, unity is not to be reduced to multiplicity, but unity contains multiplicity which cannot be separated from it. Multiplicity is not self-existing and independent (খৰ), but is its revelations and hence multiplicity is incorporated (খৰুবিশ্ব or দীন) as its expressions in the unity.

There are other arguments advanced by Sankara against Vrittikāra's theory of pantheism, but we have held them in reserve for future treatment. Here, we would place before our readers only one or two other arguments which have a direct bearing on the finite individuals. Sankara has clearly shown that the individual selves cannot be mere parts (भव्यव) of an all-inclusive whole; for, in that case, the whole, i.e., Brahman would lose its own 'nature' or seq and will have to come down here to become a mundane jiva (जीव); and Brahman would be affected by the pleasure, pain and other experiences of the parts. The finite individuals also will have to lose their own 'nature' or easy and disappear in the pantheistic whole.

12. Before we conclude this part of the subject, we should like to place on record here in this connection two other arguments found in the Vedanta-bhasya from which it would appear that the idea of absorption of the individuals (जीवड) in the Infinite whole and treating them as mere phases of that whole—was far from the mind of Sankara.

We shall first invite our reader's attention to the passage where Sankara is considering the relation between the Infinite (লয়) and the finite individuals (জীৰs).

The relation is thus expressed-

"प्रतिषिध्यते एव तु परमार्थत: सर्व्वज्ञात् परमेश्वरात् 'षयी' द्रष्टा शोता वा।— परमेश्वरस्तु— विज्ञानात्माख्यात् 'षय्:'।'' (वेदा° भाष्य°, 1.1.17).

[&]quot; सर्वेष एतेषु पश्चेष (जीवस्थ) 'स्तरूप'-नायप्रसङ्गः" (वे° भा°, 4.3.14).

तथा नैव भारमनः परस्य महाकायस्थानीयस्य घटाकायस्थानीयो जीवः, ययोक्तहष्टान्तवत् न विकारः नापि भवयवः" (मा॰, का॰ भा॰ 3.7).

Sankara argues that the individual self (জীৰ) cannot be separated from the Infinite which is present in him, and treated as a self-contained, independent entity (জৰ). The individual Jivas are always to be regarded as মন্ম (really not other than) from the Infinite from which they have derived their knowledge, action, everything. Neither can they be taken as mere phases of the Infinite, because the Infinite is মন্ম from them; i. e., because the Infinite has a being of its own and is thus distinguished (মন্ম) from the individuals. As Brahman is transcendent, there is no necessity for suppressing the individualities of any one of these.

(a) We shall now come to another passage where the individual Jivas are described as the "reflections" (মানার) of the true self behind them.—

"भाभास एव चैष जीव: परस्यात्मन:, जलसूर्थकादिवत् । न स एव साचात्, नावि वस्तन्तरम्" (वेदा°, भा°, 2.3.50).

We all know that the reflected image of the sun is but an imperfect and partial manifestation of the sun in the sky, of which—"it is a reflection. And the image shows that there is something behind it—the original sun in the sky—whose reflection it is. In this way, the actual individual Jiva is but a partial and imperfect 1 revelation of the Infinite true self which is behind him. This Infinite cannot be reduced to the individual self, as the sun in the sky cannot be reduced to the reflected image. For this reason, Sankara says—

'' न स एव साचात्, नापि वह्वन्तरं '' बे॰, 2.3.50.

i.e., neither can the individual Jīvas be identified with Brahman, nor can they be regarded as something other than Brahman.

(b) In another passage in the Vedanta-bhāsya, Sankara has explained this relation with the lilustration of a juggler (দাবাৰী) and his tricks.

help of an illustration of a Juggler and the tricks exhibited by him.
Sankara writes—

"A Juggler was exhibiting his tricks before a number of spectators. People saw that a man holding in his hand a shield and sword climbed up to the sky and they all took this man to be the real Juggler. But the fact was that the man whom the people saw playing in the sky was the production of the HTHI brought into being by the real Juggler who stood on the ground invisible to the spectators. In the same way, the true self of the finite individual is Brahman which underlies hidden behind the actual Jiva.1

This also occurs in सारकुका-भाषा।—''तसैवार्य सामाविन: सूद्रममान्यसमः सुकृतक्ताविविकाष:...सूद्रातवाक्द्राध्यानव्य: परमार्थनायावी, स एव भूमित्य: सहस्य-मान एव स्थित: ।'' (1.6).

Now, the sum total of the states, actions, passions, impulses, etc., constitute to us the actual finite individual—the "Me" (ৰাণ্ড নান্ত্ৰবিদিছ: বিমানকা). We take this self to be a separate (অব) and self-sufficient reality existing on its own account, utterly ignoring the real self which is present be hind it unaffected by these states, etc., and distinguished from them. But the states, etc., cannot be separated from the real self behind and treated as an independent reality; they must be viewed in connection with 2 the true self as its revelation, through which it is expressing its nature and realising itself. Separated 3 from the underlying self, the states, etc., become unreal. The readers will note that it is in this sense alone that the finite self has been declared to be unreal in the Sankaravedānta.

We must change our outlook and think of Brahman or the absolute Reality alone which is revealing in

- "प्राक्ततविषय-विकारै: प्रक्तम्" (कठ॰ भा॰, 2.12).
- ² Of. ''न पृथगनुभव; किन्तु तत्-साइचर्यात्'' (धतन्नोकी)।

[For, they would be mere crass plurality, there would be no purpose, no end in them.]

s The illustration of Juggler appears to us to be more appropriate than even the illustration of रज्-सपे. The illusion of a second man (whom the spectators saw) was produced by the power of the Juggler who stood—invisible all along unaffected by this illusion. In the case of रज्-सपे, the illusion of Snake is not produced by any action of the rope, it is simply a subjective idea of the people who sees it. [The 'man' ought not to be thought of as an independent reality, but only as a production of the Juggler and this would be the real view there.] ourselves, and of our states, etc., as its mere expressions. This is the true quantita view. We find thus that the Infinite true self cannot be reduced to, and identified with, the actual individual self. Such self is unreal, Sankara would say.

· CHAPTER III.

ON THE FALSITY OF THE WORLD.

1. A charge has often been brought against the Adwaita system of philosophy to the effect that in this school the world has been treated merely as an appearance and as an illusion; that the object world, in this system, is an "unsubstantial pageant" having no "stuff of reality" in it. And this they say, finds an appropriate and admirable support in the short but significant line of the old Vedantic Professor Goudapâda—

Contributory causes of the widely current opinion about the falsity of the world.

"ब्रह्म सत्यं जगिनाया, जगडुद्धौव नेवलम्।"

The current belief in this respect is that Sankara's theory of Adwaitavāda unmistakably teaches us the falsity of the world,—that Brahman being considered to be the only Reality, everything else we find in the world must needs be unreal and false. From a frequent use in the commentaries of Sankara, of the terms 'Mayâ' and 'Avidyâ'—it has been hastily concluded that everything of the universe must be Mâyâ-maya—illusory. The employment of some similes, in the works of Sankara, such as the similes of the Juggler and his Jugglery, of the celestial city in the sky conjured up by a magician, of the desert and the mirage, and the like has lent no inconsiderable help in corroborating the idea thus formed of the multiplicity (आकार) in the world as unreal and a mere appearance. It has not been felt advisable to carefully examine the terms and the contexts in connection with which they occur. No need has also been felt to scrutinise how Sankara himself has explained these terms and similes. Now, we feel it incumbent upon us to test the ground with caution, upon which such dogmatic assertion about the falsity of the world and its diversities of nama-rupas (नाम-चप) has been founded and to see also if the alleged unreality finds any real support from the writings of Sankara himself.

2. Those who care to go through the commentaries of Sankara will find out that he has mentioned three distinct classes of obtein fundamental and distinctive features does not favour the idea of falsity.

Three classes of Sankara will find out that he has mentioned three distinct classes of objects, each possessing characteristic features which distinguish each class of objects from the other class. This important classification can be very easily gathered from various portions of his Bhâsyas and it has a most valuable bearing upon the question of the falsity of the world which has gained such a notorious currency in his name.

- (i) The first class includes in it such objects as are generally known as—rabbit-horn (सम-विषाण); barren-woman's son (वन्या-पुत); and sky-flower (भाकाय-क्रमुस)1—and the like.
 - We find Sankara employing the term alīka (चलीक), i.e., 'false,' 'non-existing,' and the general term asat (चल्लो, i.e., 'unreal' in connection with these objects.
- (ii) The objects falling under the second class are generally known as things like रख्य-सर्प

(a rope appearing as a snake); युत्ति-रंजा (an oyster appearing as silver; मर्-मरीचिका (desert-mirage); and गगन-माजिन्य (the sky appearing as blue) and the like.

The term (asat) चसत्, i.e., 'unreal' is sometimes applied to such class of objects.

(iii) Then comes the last class which comprises the created phenomenal objects of the world, i.e., the nāma-rūpas (নান-র্বড), i.e., the changes (বিকাৰs) in all their diversities which we find in the world.

After enumerating these three classes of objects, Sankara tells us that the objects designated under the first class, viz. the un-fame, etc., etc., have a peculiar nature of their own. They form a separate class distinguished from the two other classes of objects. For, these objects are of such a character that they do not work at all in the world, that do not serve any practical purpose of men. We cannot put these objects to any practical use at all. Why? Because, Sankara observes, the things which have nothing to take their stand upon, which have no permanent ground to sustain them and which are not supported by any underlying substratum—must be false; since such things can do us no practical good; they would break down, they would not work—in our varied experiences of the world—

^{&#}x27; तदाताना विनिम्न का 'मसत' सम्पद्यते "—क 5° 2.20.

In respect of these objects, Sankara's remarks run to this effect:—

The objects like पग-विवास, etc., etc., have no prior cause from which they are produced; neither these objects are sustained or supported at the present moment by any underlying cause or 'being'-these have no underlying ground upon which they stand at present. Again, when these objects disappear (in future), they will have nothing-no sustaining ground-in which they will merge. For these reasons, such objects must be pronounced as really false or पत्नीक. As there is no underlying 'being' (सत or बास्पद) to support them, they must be 'non-existent' things. Hence they are not true; they are false.1

But such is not the case with the objects which are subsumed under the second class; viz, the objects यक्ति-रजत, रज्जु-सर्पे, etc. We cannot, Sankara remarks, call these things false or मलीक in the same manner as we call the objects. यम-विवाप, etc., etc., as false. Why? Because, Sankara argues—

Such things as रज्जु-सर्प, ग्राज्ञ-रजन, etc., cannot be said to have no permanent ground to sustain them as long as they appear,—

" न डि सगतव्याकादयोप 'निरास्पदा:' भवन्ति"।i.e., none of these is निरास्पद्द ; that is to say, the prior condition of the snake was the rope, i.e., as the rope appears as a snake, the prior underlying ground which gave rise to the form or appearance of the 'snake' must have been the 'rope.' At the present moment too. the ground which sustains the appearance 'snake' is the 'rope.' Again when in future the notion of snake, on the dawning of the correct notion, will disappear, it will merge in its underlying ground, i.e., the 'rope.'1 It is evident, therefore, that these objects do not resemble the objects described above, viz., भग-विषाण, etc., in respect of their 'unreality' or 'falsity.'

These objects, viz., रज् -सपे, etc., cannot, therefore, be declared to be 'false' in the sense in which the objects यग-विषाय, etc., can be so declared.

Now, let us consider the character of the third class of objects enumerated above, viz.,—the empirical objects

(i.e, the evolving changes (বিশ্বাৰ্ড) or the nāma-rūpas (বানহ্যঃ). Sankara points out—these objects agree in an important respect with the objects described above as याजिएजत, रज्ज, नर्प, etc., etc. These changes (विवारs),—these empirical objects have a prior cause from which they are produced; during their sustenance at the present moment, the same identical causal reality underlies and sustains them; and in future also, they will merge in the same underlying ground which sustains them now.

Thus, it will appear from a comparison of these three classes of objects with one another that, as regards the underlying sustaining ground, both the last-mentioned classes of objects agree with one another; but both of these differ from the first class of objects in this respect. It necessarily follows, therefore, that if you call the first class unreal or false (as Sankara has justly called them), the other two classes must, by implication, be real

Now, what is the net result of this discussion? The objects known as मम-विषाण, पाकाम-कुसुम, etc., are the only objects which may, as the above discussion shows, be designated, in the system of Sankara, as actually false or unreal. Why? Because, these objects are the only objects which, as has been proved by the above-mentioned arguments, do not even serve the practical concerns of our life, because they have no prior or present sustaining-ground upon which they stand.

Tested by this line of argument, even such objects as are known to us as याति-रजत, रज्ज-सर्प, मर्-मरीचिका, etc., cannot be regarded unreal or false, in the Sankara system. For, can the snake, as has been seen in the above illustration, remain separated from its underlying substratum, viz., the rope? Can the mirage stand, even for a moment, separated from the surface of the desert?

It follows therefore that the man who has, thus, taken pains to prove the reality of such things as रज्ञ-सपं, मद-मरीचिका, etc., will never feel inclined to regard the actual changes in the world—the empirical objects—the namarūpas (नाम-६७३)—as unreal or false. But Sankara is not yet satisfied by mere comparison, by mere exhibition of the points of agreement and disagreement among the three classes of objects. He has gone further. He actually teaches in express terms the fact that the reality of the empirical objects is even more pronounced than the reality of such objects as the mirage, the Sukti-rajata and the like—

" मृगृतृष्माकादापेचया, परमार्थीदकादि सत्यं"। (तै॰ भाष्य, 2.6.)।

Elsewhere too, while describing the created subtle and gross elements (मूर्तामूर्त प्रभूत) of the world, Sankara calls them—"सय" or 'reals,' and the underlying Brahman as—"सबस्य सन्यं" or 'the Reality of the reals.' 3

² Cf. also "सच-परमार्थीदकादि। असच-मरीच् दकादि" (प्रश्न॰ मा॰, ४।५)।

³ "पश्च भूतानां सत्यानां स्वद्यावधारणार्थमिद्मारस्यते" (इ॰ भा॰, 2.3.1.)। "नैति नैति चळ्दाश्यां—सत्यस्य सत्यं निर्द्धितितं" (इ॰ भा॰, 2.3.6)।

How can Sankara call the created empirical objects unreal or false? How can their existence be denied? Because, he has laid down the principle that "what is produced from something, from a prior 'being'—cannot itself be a 'non-existent' thing. For, a 'non-being' cannot be produced from a real 'being.'" As we can know nothing of the Causal Reality (i.e., Brahman) apart from its effects upon us, the effects or the products must be 'real.'

In this way, the empirical objects or the emergent changes have been regarded as real objects, in the system of Sankara's philosophy. Yet, most people have hastily concluded that the world is regarded false in this system.

It will be seen that it is only in comparison with the Absolute Reality (परमाथे चला) which is none else but Brahman, that the phenomenal things may be designated asat (प्यत्) or 'unreal,' which therefore means—'relatively real.'2

It is to be regretted that the critics of the Sankara system have not cared to consider properly these weighty arguments to be found dispersed in the Vedanta-works; but they have, from the mere mention of the terms in the Bháṣyas, like भग-विषाण, मरीचिका, etc., etc., jumped at once at the conclusion that the world is false in the Vedānta.

3. To another reason, the current belief in the falsity of the world may be traced. Sankara has, in more than one place in his commentaries, compared the experiences of our waking life with our dream-experiences. Finding this comparison, most people, without feeling any necessity to pause to weigh carefully the observations of Sankara recorded in these places, have run away with the idea that as the dream-experiences are known to everybody to be unreal—to have no objective reality—the waking experiences which have been likened to these, must be equally unreal. But we beg to invite our reader's attention to the two most important passages wherein this comparison occurs and to request the readers to follow us, with a view to find out how Sankara has expressed his own views on the subject.

(a) First, we should like to refer our readers to the famous passage in the Brihadáranyaka—in the story of Ajáta-Báláki where satru and an elaborate description of the dream-state and its experiences occurs, And here also is Sankara's view of the sense recorded in which he regards the waking and the dreaming experiences as 'unreal.'

If our readers follow us patiently, it will be as clear as daylight that Sankara never regarded the objects experienced by us to be unreal. What he looked upon as unreal is an altogether different thing.

Sankara thus observes—

When a man falls asleep and happens to dream, he finds himself, say, to be a king actually sitting upon a royal thronesurrounded by his people, ministers and servants; -with the maids fanning him and himself enjoying various pleasurable and painful experiences. Now, the cognitions he receives, the activities he performs, the states and feelings he enjoys -these are all his dream-experiences. Are these experiences to be as constituting the actual 'nature' or सद्य (swarupa) of the self? or, is the real nature of the self to be regarded as something which is distinct from these, and which maintains its distinct identity and unity in and through dreaming experiences? this easy (nature) to be regarded as the aggregate—the mere sum-total—of these experiences, or does it possess a nature—a 'Self-hood'-distinguished from these?

Sankara declares that these experiences cannot constitute the self; the self cannot be resolved into and identified with them. What the real self is cannot be reduced into its states and activities; for, these are not its states and activities; for, these are not its states and hence it is that which experiences these things, unaffected by them; and hence it is the subject to which these stand as its object, and these are erroneously attributed to the subject as its 'nature' or say. Such is also the case with the soul's waking experiences.

Here towards the close of this discussion, Sankara has employed the term—" पविदासना ?": i.e., 'non-existent.'

and the term—"स्वाध्यारोपिता": i.e., 'falsely ascribed to the self'; and these two terms have been used in connection with the dream-experiences. These two terms are, we are afraid the source of immense mischief created in respect of the idea of the falsity of our world-experiences.

But the readers will see that Sankara never says here that what a man experiences in his dream is false. He

" शारमभूतलेन श्रविद्यमाना एव सन्तः "----

That is to say, these experiences do not exist as his भाराम्त, i.e., as his खरण or as the 'nature' of the self. These are falsely regarded as the nature or the swarupa (अद्य or भाराम्त) of the self. The experiences of both the waking and the dreaming states of the man cannot be his भाराम्त, i.e., cannot constitute his swarupa. The 'nature' (खरण) of the self is what is distinct from these experiences; and this nature underlies these experiences, without losing its own identity in them. 1

Here with a view to preclude any possibility of a mistake, Sankara records three reasons showing that the real nature of the self is distinct from its experiences and the latter cannot therefore be regarded as within of the self. The experiences are his; they are not he. Why?—

¹ In his commentary on मासुकाकारिका, वैतथ्य प्रकरण (2.8), Sankara has shown both the waking and dreaming experiences as बस्त्—unreal. But the reason given for it is the same as here. They are unreal because they are regarded as भूकी, i.e., essential property of the self. In reality, these experiences are not so. The self seems to be affected (i.e., become स्विक्त्य) by these, but really it stands apart from these. "न खत:सिंड', किन्तु खप्रस्थानवती भूकी: ।...स्थानिभूक्षवस्यनेविति ससस्यम् ।"

- of the self. They are what the subject experiences, to which the self directs its attention. The knower must be distinct from the objects known. Hence these known objects cannot constitute the nature of the knower.
- (II) व्यक्तिवार-दर्भनात्—These experiences are by their nature transient and changing. They appear, they vanish and they are succeeded by other experiences. Such being their character, how can they constitute the nature of the self which is permanent?
- (III) बल्लनर-सम्बन्ध-जिन्नलाच These experiences are elicited from the nature of the self by the external or internal stimulating environment upon which they depend. But the underlying self is not dependent on anything and not produced by any stimulating object like " शब्दादि," i.e., the sounds, touch, etc., etc.

Here cf. "न हि यस यत् स्वइपं, तत्तेन भवती (पेचने। भनपेच मेन सिड्लात्। यदि भनपेचं, तत् स्वत एव सिड्रं" (तेन भाष्य, 1-4). Also— "द्रव्यस्य हि तत्त्वनिक्रिया, परानपेचलात्। विक्रिया न तत्तं, परापेचलात्। क कारकापेचं वतुनसाचं। सतो विशेष: कारकापेचं: ; विशेषस विक्रिय। यदि यस नान्यापेचं स्वइपं, तत् तत्य स्वइपं। यदन्यापेचं, तत् न तत्त्वं भवाभावि(भावात्"—तै० भा० 2.8।

The self is therefore distinct from its experiences. We see, now, that the experiences of the world, as such, are never regarded by Sankara as unreal or false. The unreality only comes, when the self is entirely resolved into these experiences, and when these are taken to be the nature (आवस्त) of the self.

(b) In a similar passage in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad, where a similar comparison between the waking and the dreaming experiences occurs, Sankara very foreibly expresses his view saying that their apparent unreality lies in their relativity, i.e., in relation to the dreaming experiences, the waking experiences may be called unreal and in relation to the latter, the former may be regarded unreal.¹

" जाग्रहिषयापेस्तं तदनृतलं, न खत:।"—8.5.4.

But both kinds of experiences must be regarded real respectively in their own spheres (खनिषये, खत:)।—

" खिविषयेऽपि सब्बे सत्यमैव, खप्रदृष्ट्यादव……इति न किषिषिरोधः।"—का० भाष्य 8.5.4.

4. The world of नामक्य has frequently been described as inexplicable—भनिकंचनीय

ब्रह्म परिणामादिसर्व्वयवहारास्पदलं प्रतिगद्यते " (वे॰ 2.1.27) ध

[ਾ] Here compare ਰੇਂ° lpha।° 2.2.29, where similar conclusion has been drawn.

³ Vide also ਵੇਂ ਆ 2.1.14.

The reason given for characterising the world as "inexplicable" is to be found in the expression—

तत्त्वान्यताभ्यामनिर्व्यवनीयेन।

This expression means that the world is neither absolutely ধন্ (i.e. রয়), nor it is not-ধন্ (i.e., something absolutely different from Brahman), and it is therefore inexplicable.

If the readers will call to mind what has been said about Sat (सन्) and Asat (असन्) in Chap. I, the real significance of the expression (अनिवेदानीय) will come out. From one point of view the world will appear as real or सन्, and from another point of view it will appear as unreal or असन्. We have seen there that prior to actual manifestation, the world of नामन्पड—existed in Brahman in undifferentiated condition and so indistinguishable from Brahman. But as the differentiations began to arise, some वैस्वयू something new—some difference—began to appear. But the difference which arose was in reality not something altogether different (अस) from Brahman, but is Brahman itself. For, it was nothing but the manifestation of Brahman's nature.

So long as the world is regarded as existing in Brahman in undifferentiated condition, it is identical—ৰাম্য্য—with Brahman—not বিষয় or ম্বা from it, and so long it is real or বন্. But as soon as the world is differentiated, there is some difference—বিষয় or মই also. In the Chāndogya, Sankara remarks that prior to its production, previous to its manifestation, the world was real—ৰন্.¹ But when it was differentiated or came out of Brahman—when বাৰম্ব actually appeared—we began to look upon it as something absolutely different from

Brahman—as विभन्न or पर्य—as something self-existing and independent. Taken in this way, the नामदप is unreal-भारत. But from a higher view, from the पारमाधिक standpoint—नामक्ष is not really different or पन from Brahman, but inseparably connected with Brahman. Thus from two different views, the नामकप or the world is both real and unreal. Hence it cannot be said to be absolutely real or unreal. We in our चविद्यावस्था, always separate the effects (विकारs) from their underlying causal reality (कारण). This is our व्यवहारिक-state. But even in our व्यवहारिक state, we must try to change our outlook and look upon the world from the पारमाधिक point of view, and then the familes will appear standing inseparably connected with their cause (ब्रह्म)—the underlying Reality, and not something separate. For, the underlying Reality is being expressed or realised through them.

The readers will find that Sankara does not deny the existence of the world as such, he only wants us to treat it not as पर from Brahman² or something self-existent and independent. This is Sankara's view of unreality.

The theory of causality as elaborated in the Vedanta Philosophy by Sankara which is Doctrine of causality known 88 the Sat-kāryva-vāda elaborated. Relation (सल्कार्थवाद) has not, it appears to between unity multiplicity does 'not us, received the attention which it imply falsity. deserves, and such scantv superficial treatment of this celebrated Principle of ^{&#}x27;'न हि स्थिताविप हि कार्यं कारणात्मानमन्तरेण 'स्वतन्त्र' मिक्त '' (वे $^{\circ}$, 2.1.9)।

[°] For this, the world—the नामद्य—has been stated as चारमभूत in several places. It means—'not खतन्त्र from Brahman.' cf. चात्रभूतान्मस्तरुतां, न संस्थापरिकत्थित-प्रधानादिवत् पृथग्भूतां खतन्त्रां पत्तिः…… देश्वर् द्येचाविद्यतानित्यथै: " (श्वे भा , 1.3).

Causality is, we fear, responsible, to not an inconsiderable extent, for the current views about the falsity of the world.

In a previous chapter we have given brief indication of this theory, and here we desire to elaborate the idea of causality further in the light in which it has been elucidated by Sankara himself.

Sankara, it will be seen, has, at the very commencement of his discussion, splitted up the theory into two distinct parts and laid it down as a general rule that—

" बनयले ऽपि कार्य-कारणयोः,— कार्यस्य कारणासलं, न तु कारणस्य कार्याय्मलं।" —वेदा° भा° 2.1.9.

(1) The first part, viz.,—ৰ নু কাৰ্যেন্দ্ৰ নাথাবৈদ্ৰ implies that the cause or the causal Reality is distinct from its effects or its successive changes or manifestations, because it has a 'nature,' a ৰুষ্ণ, 'selfdom' of its own; and it cannot therefore be resolved into, or identified with, the effects or successive changes emerging from it;—it cannot therefore be regarded, to use Sankara's own mode of expression, as becoming something other than its own nature (ৰুষ্ণ) when the effects emerge from it in succession—

> ''न इः विशेषदर्शनमान्ने च वक्ष्यत्वं भवतिस एवेति प्रत्यभिज्ञानात् "—

> > वेदा $^{\circ}$ भा $^{\circ}$ 2.1.1 $^{\circ}$

If you violate this part of the teaching, a great fault will vitiate your theory, viz., the causal reality would consist merely in its effects, i.e., the sum-total of the effects (parts) would constitute the cause (the whole). In this case—Brahman would be all, and all would be Brahman.

(II) The second part of the theory, viz.—
"ৰাইঘৰ ৰাবেখনেনাই"—implies that the cause is no doubt distinct from, and independent of, its effects or the emergent changes; but the effects (ৰাই্থ) or the successive changes cannot be absolutely separated from their cause and regarded as independent and self-sufficient 'things' (ৰন্ত্ৰ), each complete in itself—

" यस्य च यसादारमलाभी भवति, स तेन 'भप्रविभक्तो' दृष्टः, यथा घटादीनां सदा 1.6.1. (इ॰)।" And—" निष्ट 'वल्रुडक्तेन' विकारी नाम कश्चिद्धति । कारवात् 'व्यतिरेकेष' सभावः कार्यस्य "। 1

The effects are called भन्य from their cause. That is to say,—as the real 'nature' of the cause becomes gradually manifested or realised in these successive effects, the latter are mere means, instruments, for the realisation of the 'nature' of the cause.² It is not therefore possible to separate any of the effects from the underlying cause. For, these are merely the phases, or stages (संस्थानभेद मार्व) our readers will remember that in the Vedanta the self is known as हाई, i.e. purpose, and everything else besides the self is known as — प्राप्ते for the realisation of that purpose. This point the reader will find discussed in Chapter II.

assumed by the cause for its own manifestation. We cannot, therefore, regard any of the stages as something we or independent and separate, as if existing on their own account.—

" सांमान्यस्य (The cause) ग्रहणंनैय तहता: विशेषा: (the effects) ग्रहीता: स्यु:....न तत एवं 'निर्भिय' ग्रहीतुं मकाले '' 1

In this way, the effects are called in the Vedanta as খনৰ (ananya) from their cause.

" कारणात् पृथक्-सत्ताम्रन्यत्वं साध्यते, न तु ऐक्याभिप्रायेण² "।

The created world is not absolutely identical with Brahman—its underlying cause; but the world has no separate being apart from, or independent of, its underlying cause. That is to say, the world is entirely dependent on Brahman and inseparable from it. No one of the successive changes can be separated from the underlying Causal Reality (i.e., Brahman) which is constantly present behind each change, unaffected by it; and no one of its changes can be regarded as so many independent 'things'—

"न हि 'वलुक्तने' विकारी नाम कश्चिद्क्ति।" "परमार्थत: कारणात् 'व्यतिर्देनेण' श्वभाव: कार्य्यस्य " —(विदा॰ भाष्य 2.1.14)। of the arguments employed for its refutation has been considered in the earlier Chapter of this book (p. 63 and pp. 113-118). Some other arguments are given here.

While treating of Sankara's own view, we have found that Brahman has a 'nature'— खड्य — of its own and it is not liable to change (खड्य भन्पायलात्). And from this 'nature,' the world—the differences of nāmarūpa—are produced. In the finite self also, its states or qualities are elicited from its 'nature' by its interaction with the environment. When these differences emerge, the underlying nature or खड्य does not lose its identity, nor does it become entirely reduced to these. It continues to maintain its unity—its identical nature—in these successively emergent changes or states.

The Vrittikāra entirely reduced unity to multiplicity —Brahman or the self to the changing nāma-rūpas or states. Thus he made Brahman or the Self as— भनेकारमक, i.e., composed of parts. But yet, most inconsistently, he looked upon both the unity and the multiplicity to be equally real.4

But Sankara, in his criticism of this theory, very pertinently asks—when you reduce the one to the many, or when you reduce the many to the one, how can both be declared to be equally real? 1 One of them must be an unreality. For—

(a) If the unity is entirely reduced to the many, the many would be the only reality and the unity has no separate existence apart from the many. The unity would be merely a unity of collection—a mere aggregate of disconnected parts. The aggregate alone stands here, with no separate unity behind to connect it. There would be no real unity, no plan, no purpose, no regularity (नियमेन प्रवर्त्तमम्) in the world. As the flowers of a garland fall when the connecting string is removed, so the successive differences of nama-rupa without any connecting identity passing through them would fall to the grund,2 चानन्दगिर has so beautifully stated. Then again, as the unity is a mere logical abstraction, the nama-rupas—the many-would stand unrelated, as an independent whole. But how can there be nama-rupas at all, without Brahman on their background? For, it is Brahman as the cause of which the world of nama-rupa is the production. And without the subject, how there can be an object? Who would combine the series of his states and call them to be his own?

(b) If the many is reduced to the one, if the nāma-rūpas are changed or sacrificed to Brahman, the one or the all-inclusive whole would be the only reality. Everything of the world, all differences of nāma-rūpa, the many—would be equally divine, all would be Brahman; there would then be no differences between a saint and a sinner. All distinctions, all भेदड, will, as Sankara justly remarks, disappear.¹ There would be no higher and lower, no लारतम्य in the objects of the world.² The finite selves would be mere phases of that whole and therefore would have no freedom and responsibility.

In this way, Sankara has shown that both the unity and the multiplicity cannot be held to be equally real in Vrittikāra's theory. In Sankara's own theory where there is no question of reduction, no such absurdity as noticed above can arise. In his own theory, the one is the reality which has a 'nature' of its own and which cannot be reduced to the many. And there arises no need also to declare the unreality of the existence of the many, as in the Vrittikara's view. The many is the factor which is inseparable from the one, in and through which the nature of the unity is realising or manifesting itself, and the many—the world of nama-rupas—is to be always taken in inseparable connection with the underlying unity of Brahman as its stages or means of manifestation,—and not as a separate and an independent whole. Taken as a separate whole, the world would be an unreality.

Now, we find, as the result of this exposition of the Vedantic theory of causality that we are not to resolve the prior causal reality into its effects, i.e., the created namarupas with their infinite diversities. If we do so, the causal Reality would lose its own unity or its Swabhava (स्वभाव), and with the successive emergence of the differences or changes, it would itself become something absolutely other than its own nature (i e. খৰ). Brahman would become the world, and both would be entirely identical. Sankara calls such world unreal, For, in that case the world would be the only false, चसत्यः reality. Everywhere he has held the world and the changes (family) to be unreal and false in this sense only. He has not negated or abolished or denied anywhere the existence of the world and its changing famits, as they are, as they stand. In the case of the finite self and its states and activities, the theory holds good equally. If the finite self is resolved into its successively emergent states and activities; -the self will become absolutly identical with these and will thus become something other than itself; such a self is unreal and false.

The fact is that Brahman as well as the Jivas maintain their own nature or खर्प and preserve its unity and identity in and through its successive states or changes; and these emergent changes are always to be considered as self-evident stages (संख्यानभेद) for the manifestation or realisation of their underlying खर्प; for, we have seen that it is Brahman which has manifested itself as its other and therefore the other is not absolute, but only itself, and consequently they cannot be separated and treated as something absolulety distinct (पन्प)² from Brahman. When they are so treated, Sankara would at once call them unreal, false. In no other way, he is prepared to label the world and its experiences as false.

expressions, very widely made use of by Sankara which frequently occur in diverse places of the commentaries. These terms, phrases and expressions have, we are sure, contributed much to give currency to the idea of the falsity of the world. For, these phrases and expressions, when detached from the context in which they occur, convey the meanings which apparently may be taken to favour the idea of falsity. But fortunately, Sankara has, in every case, taken good care to give a clear exposition of these phrases and expressions, from which we can, if we feel so inclined, gather their right import. We now propose to present them to our readers with a view to show that a great injustice has been done to the writer of these phrases, terms and expressions in understanding them in a sense which was far from the mind of the author.

(a) Let us take the celebrated expression—

" वाचारमाणं विकारी, नामधेयं, ----मृत्तिकीराव सत्यम । "

We come across this sentence for the first time in the Chāndogya-Upanisad where Āruni Uddālaka, that vedic teacher of high renown who founded the celebrated Mortar-Doctrine—explained, to his son Sweta-ketu, with the help of certain familiar objects of every-day-use in the household, the relation existing between a causal substance and its effects which are successively produced from it. This sentence attained so much importance in the subsequent vedantic literature that one of its phrases formed an integral part of an Aphorism in the Brahma-sutra, and Sankara himself made use of this sentence in several parts of his commentaries while engaged in giving an exposition of the vedantic causal theory. In view of the eminent place which this sentence holds, we shall here try to arrive at the true significance of this expression.

Uddālaka was telling his son that the causal substance—the clay—produces from it several transformations in succession to which specific names are applied—say, the plate, the pot, the cup and so on. A lump of gold produces several forms out of it to which we apply specific names, viz., a bracelet, a crown, a necklace. Now, all these so-called objects, the transformations, the changes, (विकार) are, declares Sruti, absolutely dependent on the specific words people choose to apply to them. But these are in reality nothing other than—नामधेयम्—the class-name, i.e., नाम-सामान्य to which they belong as inseparably connected. This is the relation between a genus (सामान्य) and the several species (विशेषs) subsumed under it.

Sankara, in his commentary on the Brihadaranyaka, records his opinion on the relation which exists between a genus and its species. Sankara remarks there (1-6.1) that all the (भक्टविशेषा:) specific words are but the differentiations of one नाम-सामान्य—

" यः कश्चन शब्दी वागेव सा..... शब्द-सामान्यमात्रम्। एतदितेषां— नाम-विशेषाणां कारणम्। (व°, 1.6.1).

The class-name or the नाम-सामान्य is the cause of the specific words or the नाम-विशेष (individual words). It is the नाम-मामान्य which divides itself into, differentiates into, the specific words and binds them to itself. And these विशेष cannot, therefore, be taken out of, separated from, the नाम-सामान्य and treated as self-sufficient entities (श्रन्थ). Why? Because these are all included within the सामान्य and these are mere phases, shapes, forms, of that सामान्य in which it manifests itself—

" सामान्ये तिहिशेषा: जप्ता:।"

" विशेषाणाञ्च सामान्ये अन्तर्भावात "--

Sankara concludes that when the मामान्य is taken, all

¹ '' नाम-सामान्यात् सञ्जीणि नामानि यज्ञदत्ती देवदत्त इत्येवमादिपविभागानि ... তিনম্ভিন प्रविभन्यने । न तत एव निर्भिद्य ग्रष्टीतुं यकार्ते । '' º " न प्रयानुभव: किन्तु तत्-साहचर्यात् " (स्वारमनिद्यणम्).

[&]quot; सामान्ये हि विशेष: अन्तर्भवात " (क् 10 7.4.1).

the विशेषs are taken along with it; for, it included them within it¹ as its inseparable parts. It is the बामान which sustains² all its विशेषs and it is, therefore, not at all possible or reasonable to separate the latter from the former, looking upon the latter as so many independent and separated objects existing on their own account, which all of us most unreasonably do under the influence of our पविदा. Regarded in such a way, the so-called objects would be unreal, false.

Now, in the light of these suggestions made by Sankara, the sentence—" वाचारमाणं विकारी, नामधेयं; मृत्तिकेवेव सत्यं "-means that all विकारs, such as the earthen cup, the plate, the pot, etc., which are all dependent on बाक् (वाचाल्बनम्),—to which specific names or words (वाक, i.e., यक्दविशेषा:) are applied—are, properly speaking, only नामधेय, i.e., नाम-सामान्य s. And this सामान्य is real-सत्य-in them, as the clay, i.e., मत्-सामान्य is real in the specific differences, viz., the cup, the plate and the pot. Hence the family, i.e., these specific objects cannot be taken out of their सामान्य, cannot be separated from it and regarded as so many selfsufficient entities. In that case, if separated, they would be unreal - पसल Yet in our practical life (व्यवहारिक-state), we always regard them so.4 But in reality—from the पारमाधिक-stand-point, they are not such independent (चन विभक्त) things, but they are only सामान्य; for it is the सामान्य which sustains them, सामान which includes them in itself and which expresses its nature through them.

[े] सामान्यस्य ग्रङ्शेनेव तहताविशेषा: गृङ्गीताभवन्ति (इ॰ 2.4.7).

^{&#}x27; सामान्य' चारमखब्पप्रदानेन हि विशेषान् विभक्ति चारयति ' (ह० 1.6.1.).

³ The affix भ्रेय is in द्वार्थ ; नामभ्रेय must therefore mean नाममाचम् i.e., नामसामान्यम ।

The readers will see that this is the real explanation of the celebrated sentence according to the light thrown by Sankara himself, and this explanation does not at all make the विकार non-existent or unreal or पराय. Sankara wants us to regard विकार to be taken always in connection with their सामाय which finds its expression in them—and not separated from it, as so many different objects. We have no right, says he, to sever their connection or relation with their underlying सामाय—which is their causal substance. Thus the world ought not to be taken as separated from the underlying Brahman and regarded as a self-sufficient whole existing on its own account. The world would be unreal in this sense alone, according to Sankara.

- (d) Let us now take the expressions—

 इदं सर्व्य यहयमारमा—All this is what is Åtmá;
 - A superficial reading of such expressions as these cannot but leave in the mind of a reader an impression of the absolute identity of Brahman with the world. But we would request our readers to turn their eyes to the three main places in the Vedanta-bhāsyá where Sankara himself explains these expressions; viz.,—the sutra 1.1.25, Sutra 1. 3. 1, and Sutra 2. 1. 14.1

¹ In fact, in the first section (commencing from aphorism 20), second section and the third section—in all these sections (पाद) of the first chapter of the Vedanta sutras, the readers will find that the real sense of such terms as भाषा, चाकाण, ज्योति, गायची, वाय, सर, has been discussed. It has been concluded that these terms are not to be mistaken for the mere phenomenal objects of nature. They are all

Sankara's idea about these expressions may be summarised in his following observation:—

" विकारित्नुगतं जगत्कारणं व्रक्ष निर्द्धिः—'तदिदं सर्व्वे नित्यु थते,' यथा 'सर्व्वे खिल्वदं व्रक्के ति ।' कार्यश्च कारणात् अय्यतिरक्त निति वद्यामः।"1

Sankara in these places, does not at all absolutely identify Brahmau—the causal Reality—with its effects (विकार). The effects he takes in the relation of भन्य (ananya) from the cause. We have already explained the sense of भन्य from the standpoint of Sankara which we need not repeat here. It does not mean pure identity. Such being his explanation of the phrase—' एक्ट खाँच बा,' we have no warrant to regard the world with all its changes (विकारs), as absolutely identical with Brahman derived objects; have derived their existence and activity from Brahman --the causal Energy which lives in them and sustains them,—whose purpose they serve (महतानांपरार्थल इप्टें). Sankara has shown that these are all effects, and can have no self-sufficient being of their own, apart from the being of the causal Brahman which reveals in them.

"न कार्यप्रपच्च-विशिष्टः विचित्र चात्मा व्या अनेकारमको हच...एवं नानारसी विचित्र चात्मा इति। 'सर्व्ये द्वह्में ति'च सामाणाधिकरण्यात् चाशङ्का सन्मवितः तां निवर्णयतु माह।"

In Sutra 2 1.14 also, the effects are shown to be सनस् from their cause. 'त्रह्म विदंसर्ख्य', सारमेवेदंसर्ख्यं, 'नेष्ठ नाना (सि किस्न '—all these are cited as examples of that theory. The nature of the cause gradually finds its expression in the effects. Hence the effects cannot be separated from it and regarded as something स्वस्थ or independent.

Such is the sense, everywhere, of these phrases.

regarding the world as the only reality. The real nature of the cause is transcendental (क्ट्य) in the system of Sankara, which underlies all its products. And it cannot, as we have already seen, be resolved into its products.

- It is Brahman which realises itself in the form of the world. Hence the world cannot be absolutely identical with Brahman in Sankara's philosophy.² The world is simply to be taken as the means through which the underlying nature or easy of Brahman is being realised or expressed in higher and higher forms.³
- (c) It is not infrequently that the differentiations or the created náma-rūpas (নাম-ছব), —the changes or differences that are

Sankara has nowhere applied the term 'cause' to the mere antecedent in time. "नास्तुपस्यमाना पूर्वावस्था उत्तरावस्थाया: कारणमध्य पगन्यते" (वै° भा° 2.2.26).

Continuously higher and higher differences emerge in Nature, as an Inexhaustible (मृद्ध्य) and perfect principle stands behind nature and is revealing itself through her. emerging in the world have been called in the Bhāsyas as-

विद्या-प्रत्यपस्थापित—brought about or presented by Avidya;

षविद्या-कव्यित—fancied or imagined by Avidya;

षविद्यात्मक-consisting of Avidya;

षविद्याध्यारीपिते नामरूपे—(nama-rupas) ascribed or imposed by Avidya; and so on.

Now, these phrases, to all outward appearances, imply the illusory character or unreality or falsity of these changes—these emerging nama-rūpas. But such meaning, if adopted, would militate against the entire theory of Sankara, as we shall presently see.

For the true meaning of these phrases we would refer our readers to Chap. I of this book (p. 45) where we have shown that Sankara in commenting on the Taittiriya Upanishad observed that as Avidyā belongs to nāma-rūpa¹ and exists as a property of our intellect, ² it is under its influence that our intellect (অল: লেখে) always takes nāma-rūpa as an essential property of the self (আন্তৰ্কা).3 In a nother passage, we find Sankara making a similar observation, where he says that as the self has a 'nature' (खड्प) of its own, it is always distinguished from the nāmarūpa, and to look upon the nāmarūpa as an essential property or पर्म of the self, which people erroneously do, must therefore be wrong.' Brahman always remains unaffected (निर्ध्वेकस्प) by the world of nāmarūpa which has emerged from it; it is our Avidyā which makes it appear as affected (स्विकस्प) by and thus identified with the changing nāmarūpa of the world.2

The celebrated Introduction appended to the "Brahma-sūtra" also points out that it is our Avidyā 3 which produces false

³ Dr. Harmann Jacobi of the University of Bonn, Germany, in a letter addressed to the author, expresses his reluctance to take water in the sense of 'Individual Avidya' alone, and he makes a distinction between 'Cosmic Avidya' and 'Individual Avidya.' This individual Avidya he calls as "fundamental Adhyasa" under whose influence the world and ourselves appear to us to be real, but when it is sublated, they vanish as far as concern the individual soul who has got rid of his fundamental Adhyasa. It is the 'Cosmical Avidya, he says, which as a cosmical principle is the cause of the material world, and as the world is the product of this Avidya it must be false. He also observes identification (प्रशास), and the changing states of the self are looked upon by its influence as the 'nature' or सुद्ध of the that when Vidys arises it annihilates the Avidys of an individual and thereby sublates for him the आविद्याध्यक्ष: अभिष्य प्रवद्या . But this विद्या is inefficacious with regard to the cosmic आविद्या which is the cause of नामक्प, which latter continues to subsist after the mukti of a jiva.

The arguments used by the learned professor do not, hewever, seem, to us, convincing. By making a distinction between the individual and the cosmic Avidys, he simply shows that the world born of the latter is not a mere subjective appearance. It does not vanish into nothingness, the moment the individual attains Mukti. All that is involved in the attainment of Mukti is displacement of the false outlook (wfact) by the true one and not the annihilation of the world. If the world is false, even on attaining release not only the false vision of the world but the world itself should disappear. Since Dr. Jacobi concedes that the latter does not happen, he admits that the world is not false. Again, since the world is not due to our individual Avidy& but is born of the cosmic Avidys, in Dr. Jacobi's term, its only locus Māyā, in Sankara-Vedanta, is looked upon as both Ayerana (बावरण) and vikshepa (विस्तिप). In Mukti, the former only disappears while the latter remains, and it may not be regarded as more real than the false error of the independent esse of the world what the professor calls fundamental want (i.e., false identification). This alone disappears in Mukti, and not the world itself. Moreover, to regard the world as false world would be to identify Sankara's view with the vijnana-vada which would be to violate all canons of sound Sankara criticises Vijnana-vāda and it means that interpretation. he is against all theses which reduce the world to mental states. fact, the world, according to Sankara's view, is an expression of God's sakti and it is relatively real, not false. While it is necessary to distinguish the world from God, it is equally necessary to distinguish it from an illusion or subjective phantasm.

N. B. साद्या or प्राचमकि in the Sankara-Vedanta is not merely a subjective idea but it is an objective principle from which the world of nama-rūpa comes out. Many people labours under an erroneous idea that Sankara's साद्या is nothing more than a subjective idea of the mind by which we perceive the appearance of the world. But this is self, though in reality the self is always distinguished from its states.

Now, from the above discussion, we may draw the following conclusions—

(i) The finite self is not a characterless being, but it has a distinct nature of its own and cannot therefore be reduced into its states and activities. The self has been described by Sankara as transcending the external and internal elements of the body, but yet controlling and illumining them—

''कार्यकरणातीतं; तथापि कार्य-करखावभासकं—चात्मन्यीति:''। [$\mathfrak{s}^{\diamond},4.3.10$].

(ii) Similarly he has described Brahman's nature as transcending the nama-rūpas (changes) and untouched by them, but yet controlling and directing not true. In Ved-Bhasya, II. 1. 9, a suspicion may indeed arise to the effect that Sankara makes [सञ्चात्रान as the root-cause of all differentiations (विभाग व्यवहार). That it is not a mere subjective idea, but an objective principle or power (of Brahman) becomes clear if we consult a similar passage in Mandukya Bhasya (कारिका, पागमप्र 1-6) where this सिद्यात्रान has been identified with प्रावाहिक which is the cause of all differentiations.

He says there—''निवीजतयेव चेत् सति प्रखीनानां सुवृति-प्रखययोः पुनक्त्यानानुपपित्तः स्यात् ; सुक्तानाच पुनक्त्यानपस्तः । तस्यात् 'सवीजता'स्य प्रामेनेव सतः प्राचलव्यपदेशः सर्व्यात्तपु च कार्यालव्यपदेशः ।'' Here, प्राच is the cosmic seed (वीज) of the world present in Brahman. The term निष्यात्तान of the Ved-Bhāsya referred to above is nothing but this प्राचनीज । Thus the world can not be false or subjective phantasm. It is called निष्यातान or चतान, because it is the other i.e. opposite of तान or जता; but it is not absolutely other, it is also identical. (Vide Chap. I, pp. 25-31.) Also of चनिक्वचनीयवाद, pp. 135-137.

the activities of these changing namarupas—

"नाम रूपाध्यामस्पृष्टं यदिखेतत् तत् नन्नः, नामरूप-विलच्चं नामरूपाध्यामस्पृष्टं तथापि तथो: निर्व्योद् । एवं लच्चं नन्नः"। $[{\bf e}_1{}^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 8.14.1.]

Hence we find that neither Brahman, nor the individual selves can be resolved into its manifested changes. The changes stand to the underlying reality in the relation of ananya (भाग),—i.e., they cannot be separated from it and regarded as something independent; but they are to be taken merely as a means for the gradual manifestations of the nature of the underlying cause—

''खपर्युपरि च।वित्तरत्वमातानः ... 'चाताप्रकाणनाय' '' (\mathfrak{k}° चा $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 2.1.3).

" ज्ञानशक्त्राविभव्यक्तिः परेच परेच भूयसौ भवति " (वेदा $^{\circ}$ भाष्य, 1.3.30).

" चात्राप्रतिपत्त्वर्थमेव...बहुभवनादि परिकल्पाते" (तै° भा°, 2.8).

How can the changes, then, be regarded as false or unreal, in the view of Sankara? It is only when under the influence of Avidya, we forget the separate reality of the underlying cause and identify it with its evolving changes (farts), as if the causal reality has become something other than its own nature,—that the changes become false, unreal. This is done under the influence of Avidya. It is in this sense alone that the diversities of the changing nama-rupas in the world are regarded as false or unreal, in Sankara's system.

(d) Now, let us consider such expressions as—नेह नानाऽहित किञ्चन—The diversities or the differences exist not in the world;—

यस सर्व्यनास्मैनाभूत्.....तत् केन कं पश्चेत्?—i.e., the man who sees the Atmá everywhere, cannot see other things in the world.

These phrases seem to imply, apparently, that there are really no diversities,—no nama-rupas—no changes—nothing—in the world;—that these are all mere appearances and unreal.

But let us see how Sankara himself has explained these expressions. We invite our reader's attention in this connection to Sutras 2, 1, 14 and 3, 2, 22, where Sankara himself has quoted these phrases and explained them.

He first raises the question—If the 'unity' is reduced to 'multiplicity,' can

When these are produced, we erroneously identify ourselves with these; and these become the only self to us. But this Self is false. The real self is what underlies these states and activities and to which these are referred as to a centre. Such is the case with Brahman also. This identification is due to the fault of our intellect. But how can there be identification? Sankara says—"मान्याकास्पतेन दोषेष पारमाधिकं वसु न दूषात।—न च मिष्याज्ञानं परमाधेवसु दूषायतुं समयें" [की भा, 13-2]. Sankara does not call the objects false; he calls identification false. स्वद्येन मकस्पतस्य 'संस्ष्ट' इपेष कस्पितत्वमिष्टं'' [मा का भाष, मान १३३]। it retain its unity—and decides in the negative. He points out—as 'one' and 'many' oppose each other, both cannot be true in respect of the one and the same thing. The pantheists of his time looked upon 'unity' and 'multiplicity' both as true. The pantheistic unity is merely चनेकारमक, i.e., it is the unity of mere collection. It is an abstract whole—a mere aggregate of parts, having no substantial being or life of its own outside of and apart from its parts which constitute it.

But Sankara shows here that Brahman cannot be both एक and घनेकात्मक Brahman is a true unity; it has a 'being,' outside the world—

''सभग्यसत्यतायां हि कयं एकल ज्ञानेन नानाल ज्ञानमपनुष्यते इलचित ?''— वे° 2,1.14.

As Brahman has a 'nature' of its own, how can it be resolved into many and become भनेकात्मक? Hence his conclusion is that the 'unity' retains its unity in all circumstances and it is the only

[े] न हि भहरी परमार्थेसलारमिन प्राणादि-संसारजातिमिर्द जगत् 'नाना'—वस्वन्तर-भूतं भवति । "न हि प्राणाद्यात्मना इदं विद्यते कदाचिदिपि"। यथा रज्जुसहर्पेण निहम्बनाची न 'नाना'भूत: कस्पित: सर्पौऽसि, तहत्" (मा° का-मा°, 2.54)।

Reality. The diverse changes—गानस्पर —the differences which emerge from it—are not absolutely distinct from Brahman, as so many independent things true and real with the unity; but they are means, stages (पारभूतान)—for the gradual manifestation of the 'nature' of Brahman which is present behind them and is realising itself through them.

Now then, the line-

"यस्य सर्व्वनारमैवाभूत्.....तत्किन कं पश्चेत्?"— —and the line—

''नेड नानाऽस्ति किस्नन''—

Such lines, such expressions—do not mean that there are not things in the world, that all are non-entities. They mean that the things in the world will no longer appear to us in the same light in which they appear to the ordinary ignorant people. They would not appear as so many absolutely—independent things—a crass plurality—a tree there, a cow here; a river there, a man here. They would appear only as higher and higher stages through which the underlying unity of Brahman is progressively revealing its own 'nature,' is realising itself—1

 $^{^1}$ ''स्थावरत्वादारभ्य उपयुँपरि चाविसारत्वमात्मनः..... चात्मप्रकाञ्चनाय'' $[\mathfrak{p}^\circ$ चा $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 2.1-3] ।

The emerging nāma-rupas would, now, be looked upon as only further and further revelations or realisations of Brahman; they would not, now, be looked upon as 'खतिरक्त' or 'भव' or absolutely distinct from the underlying Brahman 1 but as भवन्य from it.

This is the conclusion which we have gained from a discussion of Sankara's celebrated Doctrine of Causality. Now it stands clear that there arises no question for the abolition of the diverse objects in the world—in the system of Adwaita Philosophy.

(e) There is still another phrase used in the Vedanta which demands our consideration and attention. We mean the phrase known as—ৰিমীয়-লিবাক্তব্য or বিমীয়-সনিষ্ঠ ।—
i.e., the repudiation or rejection of the

The qualities are but the activities of the individual things or individual beings. The phrase বিমীঘ-निराकरण may appear at first sight mean that Sankara has denied the existence of the qualities—that these are mere appearances;—that they do not really exist. But let us assure our readers this was far from the mind of Sankara. explanation of this विशेष-निराकरण which he himself gives in the Vedanta-Sutras-4-3-14 and 3-2-22 conclusively shows that he has denied nothing, repudiated nothing, rejected nothing.

The purport of his explanation is briefly this:--Suppose a quality emerges; if you identify the underlying Brahman (Causal Reality) with this quality, Brahman becomes entirely reduced to this quality hence it becomes something and 'being': other than its own whereas all the time Brahman maintains unity in and through this quality;with othersuccessively 80 on emergent qualities in the world. Sankara's idea is that Brahman is to be regarded always as a unity, unchanging in own nature and unaffected by the qualities; and it cannot therefore be regarded as—गुजनियप्ट or अञ्चीनियप्ट, i.e., identical with the qualities—as if its nature is not one but composed of the qualities (जनेकारमक) 1—

" भनेकशक्तित्वं ब्रह्मण इति चैत् ? न। विशेष-निराकरणश्रुतीना मनन्यार्थेत्वात्।"

Sankara next concludes-

" प्रपद्मिव 'ब्रह्मणि कल्पितं' प्रतिषेधित, परिणिनष्टि ब्रह्म" —— (वै° भा°, 3.2,22).

i.e., By विशेष-निराक्तरण, the qualities, as such, are not repudiated or negated; but Brahman if regarded as composed of the qualities is repudiated or negated.

The 'nature' (अ६३) of Brahman is present behind the qualities evolved in the world and this nature cannot be resolved into or identified with them. It is present unaffected by these changing qualities. Sankara has elsewhere pointed out that all the changing and emergent qualities are interwoven into the underlying Reality which reveals its nature through them-.

"सामान्याननुविद्धानां विशेषाणामदर्भनात्" (इ° भा° 1.6.1).

It is wrong therefore to identify the under-lying reality with these qualities. This identification is repudiated, as it is due to our intellectual error (ৰুৱিহাম or মৰিহা); and therefore such identification must be false, unreal.

This is the purport or sense of the वियेषनिराकरण or of the repudiation or rejection of the qualities. Sankara has established this position in another way thus—

> These qualities are definite relations into which one individual is brought with other individuals or things. But these relations cannot exhaust the individuals. I am brought into a particular relation with you, but yet I am something more than this relation. In this way, every individual self is a part of another individual self, yet he belongs to himself. Sankara points out that an individual has a substantive (खद्भ or विशेष) and an adiectival (संम्बन्धिका or विशेषण) mode of exist-He exists by himself and this is ence. his substantive mode; yet he is related to something beyond him and this is his adjectival mode of existence. A man, say Deva Datta, may come into different relations with different people and he is designated differently. But yet the same Deva Datta does not lose his own स्वकृत in these relations. 1 Every individual therefore maintains his own identity in the various relations into which he is brought with others. Brahman, in the same way, maintains its own identity in those variously interconnected relations or qualities.²

If you identify the underlying Brahman with these relations, Brahman would become 'many'—चनेकासक, नानामुचितिष्ट i. e. composed of parts. Sankara has not denied the relations or qualities as such. He only denies Brahman or the individual self being regarded as चनेकाकक. Such self or Brahman must be unreal, false, in Sankara system.³ The relations are but a means, or medium (ज्याय, कार) for the expression of the swarupa of the underlying unity and hence they are warup from the swarupa.

(f) There is another expression, riz, দ্বস্থ-বিজয়— Dissolution of the world—which deserves consideration.

The question of प्राप्त-विजय arose in connection with a doubt which existed in the mind of many people. So long as the world exists to occupy our mind, to distract our attention, how is it possible to realise the knowledge of Brahman? For, the world stands there as a rival to Brahman and it will act as an obstruction in the way of the knowledge of Brahman. It is therefore necessary to dissolve the world—to abolish it altogether so that nothing stands in the way of the realisation of Brahman.

In order to remove this doubt, Sankara has given us the true sense of the idea of স্বস্থ-বিজয় from which his views about the existence of this world very prominently stand in clear light. He has recorded his views thus:—

"What," Sankara enquires of the doubter, "is your idea about the Dissolution of the world — प्रयम् निजय, pray? Do you mean by it that as heat disintegrates the solid particles of the clarified butter and ultimately dissolves them, we are to dissolve the world in the like manner? But this is, we say, simply an impossibility.

The world—both in its subjective and objective condition—actually exists (विद्यमान:), nobody is therefore capable of dissolving the existence of such a world. Hence such actual dissolution of the world is out of the question. You cannot really mean this by your term प्राप्त-विजय. If, however, your idea about dissolution be that we are to remove—dissolve—the false identification—the identification of the world with Brahman in consequence of an erroneous imposition of the former upon the latter (by ignoring the distinct being of Brahman which underlies the world unaffected by its changes), you are welcome to do this. Such dissolution by true knowledge is indeed possible. We agree with you in this view of dissolution."1

Do these remarks show in any way that in Sankara-Vedanta the actual existence of the world has ever been denied?

8. We should like to conclude this discussion by calling the attention of our readers to an important typical illustration given by Sankara with a view to clearly illustrate the steps of his own doctrine of causality as expounded by him in his Vedanta-bhasya. We find this typical illustration admi-and importance to the student of the Adwaita Philosophy which will make clear in a different way the problem, the solution of which we are seeking in this chapter; and will prove helpful in coming to a decision about it. We have therefore thought it fit to re-emphasise this illustration to which reference was made in a previous chapter.

Sankara explains here the idea of the cause and the effects which emerge in succession from it by an illustration of a lump of earth (মান্ত্রা) and its successive transformations until the last transformation—the jar (ম্ব্ৰ)—is reached. The ultimate future end is present, he says, in the real nature or অৱব of the causal substance. It is impossible to hold it to be non-existent in the cause. To deny this presence is to make the passage clearer for the easy entrance of that undesirable guest—Asat-kāryya-vāda (মন্ কাঠ্যাই). Until it is completely realised, the End—though future—must be held to be present in the nature of the cause.

The potter, Sankara observes, with a view to produce this end, viz., ঘহ (jar) collects the দ্বানিকা (lump of earth) and continues giving it its successive shapes (in the form of ৰুখ, যেন্ত, কথাল, etc.). You cannot, Sankara goes on, deny this striving on the part of the potter towards this future end.² Sankara says that, it is necessary, for an end to realise itself completely, to pass through certain antecedent transformations or stages.¹ It follows therefore that the future end is present throughout the successive stages of the सत्तिका—though not in actual form ("वर्तमानताद्वेष"), but still it is present throughout in the form of future possibility ² in the nature of सत्तिका.

The change is a relation between two terms. In order to be related, the two terms of the relation must be real. The change is therefore a relation between something present and something future, i.e., which is going to be. If you say the future is unreal, is nothing—then the cause or Brahman would itself become unreal. The future (\(\frac{1}{2}\)) therefore operates in the present (i.e., in the \(\frac{1}{2}\)) and the present becomes thus connected with the future.

^{&#}x27; ''कारणे वर्त्तमान' कार्यः कार्यान्तराणानावरणनित्यवीचान।...पिग्छ-कपालाद्यवस्थ्यो विद्यमानमेव घटादिकार्यः घटादिकार्यार्थेना घटादिकार्यार्थेना घटादिकार्यार्थेना घटाद्यकार्यार्थेना

"किस, प्राग्रुपत्ते: सभावभूतस्य घटस्य स्वकारणसत्ता-सम्बन्धानुग्रितः, इयायत्ततात् सम्बन्ध्य " (i.e., the change being a relation, must have two terms of relation—the present and the future. The future cannot therefore be non-existent or सस्त.)

³ In the Mandukya, 6, Sankara says---

[&]quot;यदि हि ससतामेव जन्म न्यात्, ब्रह्मणी ग्रहणहाराभावात् समस्त-प्रसङ्गः।" ..nanda-giri elaborates the passage thus—" ह्यायत्वत्वात् सम्बन्धाय । कार्येण हि लिक्केन कारणब्रह्मज्ञानार्थेलं स्टिश्चितीमां। तचेदसद भवेत्, न तेन तस्य कारण-सम्बन्धभीरिति ससदेव कारणमणि स्यात्।"

[•] For, ঘুট is an end and it is the real cause of the striving or movement of মুখিবা towards the end, which striving exists for its sake. The end is therefore present in the beginning and operates as a real cause.

Hence, the cause is really the future End or Power which is realising itself in all the changes. It is therefore this power which underlies, and works in, all changes. It gives continuity to them and is above them all. It is realising itself through all successive changes which cannot, therefore, be separated from it. Sankara illustrates this idea thus—

"As a player, taking on successive characters upon himself, enacts on the stage the parts of each of these characters in succession, but yet retains his own distinct character; so the underlying causal unity, retaining its own distinct identity, realises itself successively in each of the changes produced." ²

Now, we must apply this typical case of मृत्तिका and its final realisation in the form of घट, to all the individual changes in the world. We come then to learn from Sankara's exposition just stated that—

[&]quot; भारमस्त्रकपप्रदानेन सामान्य विशेषान् भारयति " and " सामान्ये जन्मसत्ता-कानामेव कर्मणा स्मृटौकरणं" (३° and का°)।

² "मूलकारणमेव चा—चन्याःकार्यात्, तेन तेन कार्याकारिण, नटनत् सब्धे-व्यवहारास्पदत्वं प्रतिपदाते" (वै° भा°, 2.1.18). Also Vide वै°, 1.3.19.

And in order to have its final realisation, this end will necessarily have to pass through its preceding successive transformations or stages, until at last it becomes finally realised in its last stage. This last stage is therefore the end of the individual being and this end is therefore a future possible power, present in the individual; and it works in all the changes as its purpose. This end (or purpose) is the real cause; for it reveals itself more and more through the successive transformations or stages and completes itself in the last stage.

Is it possible, then, to separate any of these changes or stages from the underlying ভাবে (swarupa) of the individual and to treat them as independent things (খনৰা)? For, how is it possible to know the real nature of the cause until it reaches, and fully reveals itself in, its last change or stage?

For this reason, Sankara has repeatedly remarked that no effects can be treated as something distinct and separate from their underlying cause. For, it is the cause which is revealing or realising itself in these changes. The effects are therefore nothing but the necessary expressions of the cause which is present and operative behind them.

¹ It has been noted that the underlying cause must be present up to the time the last effect is produced "ईतुस्त्रभावस फलकाल।वस्थायितं" and "ईतुस्त्रभावातुपरक्तस फलस भद्यनीत्" (वे° भा°, 2.2.20). For, it is seen everywhere that the last effect (फल) is always accompanied and coloured by the underlying cause. "लहाबातुरक्कां वृद्धिं बार्यं कार्ययोः" (वे°, 2.1.15).

Of. the expression—" एकविज्ञाने सब्बविज्ञानं भवति,"

Is it then possible for Sankara, who gives such a description, to deny the effects or changes and to declare them to be false or unreal? The falsity only comes in, if you regard the nature (क्षेप) of the underlying cause actually lost in these effects emerging from it;—if the every is resolved into and thus absolutely identified with these changes—as if it has become something other than itself (i.e., पण),—as if the underlying Brahman is actually converted into the aggregate of the empirical changes, and thus become भनेताश्मक:।

misapprehensions which certainly exist about the problem of the unreality of the objective world of facts and we may fairly conclude that we are not committed to the universal nihilism in Sankara's school of Philosophy. A few words must, however, be added in regard to one point of primary importance, before we conclude this line of our enquiry.

We have said that Brahman (as well as the individualselves) possesses a खड़प, a nature, of it own. In order to realise this खड़प, Brahman has created and evolved the world,¹ and the world is moving from the lowest to the highest stages.² This movement has become possible for the world, because behind each stage, that eternal principle (पूर्विचित्र: भारमा) is present, which is gradually expressing itself in and through these stages or changes.

The reader who has followed us thus far will now find that such is the position which Sankara has taken up in the Vedanta philosophy. Against this position, however, an objection may be urged to the effect that if the multiplicity of the changes is held to be not false or unreal, what would be the fate of the Sruti which insistently declares that—

"there is only one principle—Brahman which is without a second—secondless"—

" ब्रह्म एकं चिहतीयम्"।

 $^{^1}$ " पूर्व्वसिद्धोऽपि हि सन् शास्मा विशेषेण विकारात्मना परिणमयामास शास्मानं" (वे $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 1.4.26). ''यच यदारमना यत्र न वक्तंते, न तत् तत छत्पद्यते ; यथा सिकतास्यक्तं लं " वे $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, (2.1.16)।

There is thus a conflict between the statement of the Sruti and the position established by Sankara. To this supposed objection, Sankara thus replies—

- (i) To the ordinary ignorant people,—who under the influence of avidyά, resolve the underlying unity (Brahman) into the multiplicity of the changes and thus identifies the two,—the multiplicity of the changes is the only Reality. Thus no question of conflict between the unity and the multiplicity can rise here.²
- (ii) But those who have realised the truth that the underlying unity (সন্ধা) is untouched (unaffected) by the evolving multiplicity of changes—do not regard these changes as something separate and apart (অবিহিন্ধ) from Brahman, do not look upon them as so many independent and self-sufficient 'things' (খন্য) complete in themselves.3 To these people, the multiplicity of changes would appear merely as a means (उपाय, पारध्वानि), as a mere indicative mark (परिचायक विद्यानि), as an expression (संख्यानाव)—of the underlying Brahman.¹ The gradually evolving changes ³ would appear to these people, merely as an instrument (पराचे) for the realisation of the purpose (वाये) ³ —of the underlying Brahman. Thus there is no possibility of a conflict (विरोध) between the unity and the multiplicity here also.
- '' नामद्योपाध्यस्तिते,—' एकमैवाहितौयं' इत्यादिश्रुतयो विक्ध्येरन्— इति चेत् २ न ; सिललफोन दृष्टान्तेन-परिश्वुतलात सृदादिहृष्टान्तैय'' (इ°भा°, 3.5.1).

After establishing his theory in his commentary on the Vedanta, Sankara has expressly recorded his remarks thus—

"The author of the Brahma-Sutras himself saw no reason for rejecting the manifested changing world (কাৰ্য্যমুখ্য). The Sutra-kara adopts the বিবর্গবার (i.e., the principle of unity) as of supreme value; but he has also retained परिचाम (i.e., the fact of the multiplicity of changes) as of subordinate value and entirely dependent on the former." 1

In his commentary on the Mandukyakarika, Sankara himself expressly tells us that there is really no conflict between the Dwaita (the empirical world of changes and the Adwaita (Non-Dualism, i.e., the fact of unity) ²—for the reasons advanced above.

Ananda-giri also in elaborating the idea of Sankara has by an illustration shown that no conflict really arises between the two standpoints—the empirical truth and the transcendental truth.

Vidyāranya in his पश्चदशी, in explaining the विवर्षनाद, has shown that in Sankara-

 $^{^1}$ "सूत्रकारोऽपि परमार्थां भिप्रायेण 'तद्गन्यलं ' मित्याइ । अप्रत्याख्यायेव च कार्यप्रपद्धं, परिचान-प्रकियाच आश्रयति " (वे $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$, 2.1.14.).

Vedanta the परिणामवाद is not incompatible with the विवर्तवाद¹.

Thus we find that no need arises to abolish परिणाम. Both the परिणाम and विवर्त can exist compatibly together.

It will be seen that we have (ried in this chapter, as well as in others, to present Sankara before our readers, as he reveals himself in his own writings; and we hope that our readers will agree with us in thinking that it is not possible to come to any other conclusion than that which we have sought to reach here, from a deep and careful reading of his commentaries. It is our firm conviction that a great injustice has been done to this great philosopher of India in respect of this most vital point upon which rests his great नायानार—the Theory of Mâyâ.

CHAPTER IV

PLACE OF ETHICS AND RELIGION IN VEDANTA

1. It is very widely believed that one of the fixed

Opinion prevails that Vedanta is opposed to Ethical Theism and is antetheistic in religion. Its goal is—not enrichment but emptying of hum in soul.

tenets in the Vedanta is that the work or कर्म is, after all, a bondage which ties a man to this metempsychosis or Samsdra (मंसार). One must try therefore to get rid of this bondage and secure his final release or सुनि from it. It necessarily follows from this that the Vedantic सुनि (Mukti) is equivalent to the emptying of the human soul, which directs all its energy to leave the human life devoid of all actions and thus to make it a barren desert. It is also generally held that human desires or कामनाड are condemned wholesale in this system of philosophy in no unequivocal language and unmistakable terms; and it is the desires which lie at the root of all works. To kill the desires outright is evidently the sole aim of the Vedanta and their total annihilation, it is thought, is enjoined in an authoritative tone, whose voice can be heard from every page of the Vedantic literature. In dealing with this subject, a writer has thus expressed his idea:—

"The Indian Theism, because of its bondage to the Karma idea, has been unable to rise to a high conception of the Divine character. In making motive itself the fetter, instead of evil motive, it turned its back upon the ethical goal and suggested the endeavour to escape from the region of the ethical altogether......The endeavour to get rid of desire is an endeavour to pass beyond the good, and ends in confounding the conscience with covetousness."

As the entire man is thought to be a mere sum-total of "desires and works mechanically related," and as his virtues and vices are all relegated to the empirical region and are described as false and unreal; -it has been generally supposed that the destruction of the individuality which consists merely in the desires, works, pleasure, pain, etc., is the aim of this philosophy which seeks absorption of one's being in the "difference-less pantheistic empty void " which it calls Nirguna Brahman (निर्दा प नहा) and such absorption is the una which it teaches. The healthy enrichment and expansion of the human soul by the acquirement and cultivation of moral virtues, it is seriously maintained, is out of place in this system of philosophy. And a philosophical system which, it is very justly concluded, can shed no wholesome influence upon the life and conduct of man and human society, has very little practical interest which it can evoke and it stands condemned in its own teaching.

Such, in fact, are the ideas and conclusions which are to be found extensively gaining ground both in Europe and in India even among the best and the most sympathetic critics of the Adwaita philosophy.

We propose in this chapter to cautiously examine the validity of the assertions above referred to, and to see if such conclusions as have been drawn find any support from the writings of Sankara—the great interpreter and leader of this school of thought. We shall also try to discover what constitutes the real teaching of the Vedanta and to determine if Ethics and Religion do not form an integral and essential part of the Vedantic theory.

2. Every man is born endowed with a psychological disposition which may be traced to the origin of the human race, and which constitutes the most essential heritage for him to which he has succeeded. In this disposition are to be found imbedded succeeded. In this disposition are to be found imbedded all his natural instincts and habits, his love and hatred, his pleasure and pain, his appetites and passions, and his entire stock of impulses and desires. It is the receptacle of all the race-experience and his past impressions or संस्कार lying deep in it in a latent form, ready to rise up to the surface at the slightest notice or call. Sankara would call this disposition— जैवमकति or स्वभाव or nature, and man is passive (प्रस्तान्त्र:, प्रवा:) in respect of this सभाव (nature) which determines him and his actions, and which is revealed when he is born. It is owing to this disposition that man has likings and dislikings for particular sense-objects;—that some men are seen from their childhood evincing natural attachment to mundane objects of enjoyments, and others developing natural aversion to temporal pleasures.

An idea of how this 'disposition' (जैन पकात) has been described in the Vedanta-works can be formed from the following:—

- (a) "Nature (प्रकास) is the Samskára (the latent self-reproductive impression of the past acts of Dharma and a-Dharma) manifesting itself at the commencement of the present birth.......All living beings follow their own nature."
- (b) "Nature (() is the tendency (Samskåra Básará) in living beings acquired by them in the past births, and manifesting itself in the present birth ready to yield its effects, and this 'nature' is the source of the Gunas, it being impossible for the Gunas to manifest themselves without a cause."
- (c) "As regards all sense-objects, there necessarily arise in each case love (ব্ৰে:) for an agreeable object, and aversion (देव:) for a disagreeable object. When desire (काम:) arises, it rouses the Rajas and urges the person to action.

This 'nature' or empirical character of the man is a gradual development in consequence of his education, association, society and the circumstances in which he is born and brought up. This is the unformed, undisciplined animal nature in man. Thus, man is born with a fund of animal impulses and inclinations which are the source of his movements or the tendency to activities. He is born subject to desires—love and hatred—vij-s ywhich colour his whole nature. Man is, at the beginning no better than an animal being. He is just emerged from nature; he is not yet a self-conscious being. He is simply 'aware' or 'conscious' of certain passive feelings aroused in him in consequence of his contact with the outward environment, and of certain impulses within, spontaneously rising and demanding their satisfaction-moving him towards, and repelling him from, the agreeable and disagreeable objects, as the case may be. In fulfilling his काम-क्रोध (impulses of love and hatred), he fulfils his life's entire purpose. These impulsive movements are always accompanied by pleasure and pain which leave their impression upon the mind. Mere idea of pleasure, thus, becomes the guide of his life and the sole guide of his movements and actions.

"Desire is the longing for a pleasuregiving agreeable object of experience when actually coming within the ken of our senses or heard of or remembered; and anger is the aversion for the disagreeable, for the cause of pain when being seen or heard of or remembered."

Man is completely passive here and utterly at the mercy of these impulses. This is the empirical, actual self.

Sankara, as we remarked before, is reluctant to call this self a self at all. He is fond of calling it water. There is agency in this self no doubt; but this is no real agency at all. For, all the necessary elements constituting the agency of this self are reciprocally determined by their antecedents and consequents in time. The actions involving movements of the body, sense organs, manas, are necessarily mechanically determined by, and are the resultant of, their antecedent conditions in time—

" चलनाताकस्य कर्मणः भनाताकस् कस्य

(গী° মা°, 18.66.)

None of these actions can, therefore, be called 'free.'

In such a life, there is no purpose, no end, no aim, no regulation.² As we are enslaved by these impulses and passions and blinded by their influence, we cannot discern

3. But is this the 'whole' man? Is man's environment without and his impulses withsible man.

Actual man and posinin,—the sole determinant? Is there no other nature higher in man than this his 'animal nature'? Is there no say—inner unity—underlying these manifold impulses and instincts which is the true source of his action?

What a man speaks and acts is not the whole man. All that flows from him—all his words, actions and movements cannot be the exhaustive expression of the man. It is wrong to identify the man with all these. What the man actually thinks and acts can never be equivalent to what the man is in his essence. What he actually feels, thinks and does—falls infinitely short of what is possible for him to do. He is not a mere sum-total of his feelings, impulses, habits, gathered in the past.² As much as he did express himself in his past records, and as much as he expresses himself in his present deeds and thoughts—fall far short of what properly constitutes his 'nature' or सदय. These will always remain imperfect expressions of that inner 'nature' which these seek to express. It is because man is something more than these. It is because Brahman which is infinite and inexhaustible (प्या), is revealed in man and is present behind him. It is for this reason that—no one of his expressions can fix the infinite and inexhaustible possibilities in man in a rigid and final form.

Sankara has observed that infinite সানীষ্ঠ (infinite knowledge and power, etc.) lies concealed in man under the cover of his actual thoughts and deeds.4

self is thus described—"That which first shows itself as the Innermost self (प्रविश्वाहमा) in the body, and turns out in the end to be identical with the supreme Reality—the Brahman."

- ³ "सब्बेष भूतेष ... एकं भावं भारमवस्त अव्ययं प्रश्नात, तस्त भावं भविभक्तं (indivisible) प्रतिदेशं देशभेदेभ " (गी॰ भा॰, 18.20).
- * It is wrong to restrict what is inexhaustible to its actual deeds and thoughts, as if these are its exhaustive expressions. In the Gita such idea has been condemned as tâmasa iden. 'यत क्रतस्वरत् (i.e., यत् भव्ययंतत्).....एकस्मित्रेव कार्यं सक्तं......'एतावानेव भारमा परमेश्वरो वा. नात;परमसौति'—ईदयं ज्ञानं तामसानामेव भवति' (18.22). "Atma," says Sankara, "has been expanded in man only. With other animals, eating and drinking alone constitute their sphere of knowledge. But man is entitled to approach and reach the supreme end of life (লি:মুব্ধ). He it is who desires to gain the highest end by appropriate means and by knowledge (লম্মন্ব্যা)."

(गी° भा, 10.34).

That is to say—"it is the actual presence of the Supreme End behind them—which constitutes the possibility for their future progress from the present stage to the next higher and higher stages—of those who are fit for such progress."

"Man's distinction lies in the fact that instead of being passively disposed of by his impulses and desires, he can bring them under the law of the rational self which the impulses envelop."

It is this presence, within us, of something inexhaustible which makes us desire more and more, and it is for this infinite possibility in us that we never feel satisfied with our actual thoughts and deeds.

Because of this possibility of man he is held responsible for the works-good or Man solely respon-sible for his deeds. bad-done by him. How is it that we do not make animals accountable for their evil works? What is it that distinguishes a man from the lower animals? It is not at all possible for an animal to do otherwise than what is dictated to it by its actual nature, by its impulses and passions. But with man the case stands differently. He could have, had he only paused and deliberated, seen the consequences of his impulsive actions which he had indulged in. There was, in him, a possibility for a better course of action than what he had done, and this possibility he had ignored. Why did he, in following his evil impulse, stoop to an animal satisfaction? It is for this that we hold the man responsible for his evil deed and punish him for it. We all know, his actual life is not all-in-all to him; infinite possibility lies hidden in him. An infinite possibility either for good or for evil is always present in him. is for this possibility within man that nobody can tell how he will express himself at the present crisis. It was for this possibility within him that the notorious Jagai (जगार) whose life had seemed irrevocably fixed in evil ways, was suddenly shocked into his real life and quite unexpectedly turned over a new leaf, resolving thenceforward to live a higher life, -when the famous saint of Nadia-Srichaitanya-had extended his arms of love towards him in return for the bleeding injury he had received from the cruel hand of the miscreant. It is this possibility or power which is the shaping or directing force (प्रेरविवा) within us, bringing man, step by step, to the ultimate realisation of his final endhis परमपुरवारे. Man's actual present life is this possibility so far realised; -is the partial and imperfect manifestation or expression of this inexhaustible possibility.

4. Sankara has observed in more places than one that—

The nature of self:
(i) It is an end—
Purposive-Power—utilises all its activities for its own realisation.

"all the movements visible in the world, all its works and activities—must have a regulative purpose present behind them which shapes them for its own realisation."

"It not only holds good in the outward world, but it is also true in all the activities of the inner world." He continues—

"it is also the case with all the impulsive movements which go on within the human organism—all the actions of the sense-organs, all the functions of the man's intellect and the like."

This is an observation the value of which, it is needless to add, cannot be overestimated. What are these movements and activities for? For what use do these aspirations, efforts and actions (सब्देश: महत्त्वय:) go on? Their value, Sankara points out, does not lie in that they exist along-side of Ātma, but in the use (क्योलाप्राविभिन्त) which the Ātma (the self) makes of them.

" दिश्किमीलापत्ति-निमित्ता हि जगत: सब्बेग प्रवृत्ति:—' महिनदं भीन्ते' …' एतद्येमिदं करिष्ये ' ' ददं जास्यामि ' — दश्यावा "। 1

1 Vide Gita, 9.10-

"सयाध्यक्षेण प्रक्रतिः सूयते सचराचरं। हेतुनानेन कौलेय जगत विपरिवर्षते ॥

Sankara explains the stanza in this way — The aquitan of the world, i.e., the continuously changing elements of the world are

All these activities of the organism have their only value in the fact that they may be used by the द्वा-the rational "I" for his own purpose; that they may be utilised for his end; that they may prove useful (कर्मलापा or उपकार) to him. Otherwise, all these actions and movements (प्रवस्थ:) will entirely lose their value.¹ There is the Âtma or the self within, other than these movements and activities, for whose sake they act. This remark proves the self (पाला) to be a Purpose—and end—which is realised in these activities, and which utilises these for its own use.

Elsewhere, Sankara's remarks in this connection are equally valuable and bring the same important truth into prominence—

"Suppose," he says there, "no Atma (self) is present behind these activities (प्रस्त्र); there are only these activities working, but there is no purpose to regulate them. An absurd consequence will follow, viz., nobody is present whose purpose they serve; nobody is there to use them, to utilise them—moving to realise a Divine Purpose or end. The world with all it changing elements is moving for the realisation of the Final end. हित्ना निमित्तन भनेन भध्यस्तिन जगत् चरायरं विपरिवर्णते स्वयावसास् ...जगतः सर्वेश प्रवृत्तिः...भवगतिनिष्ठा भवगत्वसाना । i.e., ब्रह्मावगति—The realisation of Brahman is its भवसान, i.e., the Final end. In the Vedantabhasya he says—भवगतिपर्यंतं ज्ञानं ..नातः पर्व किश्वित् 'भाकाञ्चा' भत्ति । i.e., the realisation of Brahman is the पर्योक्त—the final goal where all desires find their fulfilment. Hence the sense of the stanza is that all activities are for the realisation of the final Purpose.

1 "काष्ठ लोडसमस्य चैतनेन चप्रवित्तितस्य प्रहत्त्वज्ञुपपत्तः" [वे॰ सा॰, 3.2.38]. All बहत्तित (activities) without the self to direct them are like जान जीन. "बप्रसिद्धे हि बात्मिन, खार्थी: सन्त्री: प्रक्रमय: व्यर्थी: प्रसन्त्रेरन् " ।—

'The activities would thus prove useless (অধা); they would be to no purpose. For, there is no regulation of these activities; no purpose to guide them.' Thus there would be no order, no unity, no central purpose in the human life.

It has been stated elsewhere, as a general principle that—

"the works and activities (प्रवास), if severed and cut off from their source, the self,—are entirely valueless or useless, like the broom, the stick, the dust on the road-side."

This important truth is also expressed in the Kenabhasya where the self has been established as a purpose a will-power—an organising principle—and it is this

- ¹ Vide Gita-Bhasya, 18-50. Here also the commentator remarks that the actions and the works point to something beyond them whose purpose they serve, for whose sake they act. Otherwise pleasure, pain, etc., would have to be supposed to be acting for the sake of pleasure and pain, etc.; the activities of the body are for the sake of the body. To avoid such absurd supposition, the existence of the self must be admitted whose purpose these activities realise. "नम सुखाएं सुखं, दु:खाएँ वा दु:खं। मात्रावगत्यवसानायेखाम सञ्च्यवद्वाराणां." All activities are moving for the realisation of the self (भारा) which is their final end (भवसान). It is the self which connects and determines all these functions and activities for its own final realisation. This is the significance of the commentary here.
- ³ "स्तत: काष्ठ-लोष्टसमानि हि तानि (चचुरादीनां दर्शनादिसामध्यानि) चैतन्यात्मन्धीत:श्र्न्यानि" (इ° भा°, 4.4.18). Cf. "काष्ठ-लोष्टसमस्य चेतनेना-प्रवर्त्तितस्य प्रवृक्त्यक्षप्रपत्ते:" (वेदा° भा°, 3.2.38). Cf. also "तेन हि निरात्मकं किच्चित्रवहाराय प्रवृक्तस्तिः"

purpose for whose sake all the elements of the body work. And this purpose is, in its nature, other than (खन्स) these activities which it directs and controls and moves for its own realisation—

"खतन्त्रस्य दक्कामात्रे ग्रैव मन-पादि-प्रेषियतृत्वं " 1

Do not all these passages clearly imply that Sankara's idea about the self was that it is an End-in-itself—a Purposive power—which purpose utilises all its impulsive movements for its own realisation? Can, in the face of such clear expressions embodied in these passages, Sankara's self be treated as a "mere intelligence divorced from action"? We have gathered together principal passages on the subject and presented them before our readers with the hope that they may come to their own conclusion on this important point for themselves.

But we have not done with it as yet. To another passage which is found recorded in the Katha-Bhasya² we now beg to request our readers to turn their attention. This passage will show that the self is a 'free causality' which weighs its impulses and determines their activities for the realisation of its own End or purpose.

^{*} Fide कठ-आध्य, 2.2.5. '' मन्द्वुजीनां दुर्विवेकक्षे पुरुषं प्राप्नृत: श्रेय: प्रेयस । चीर: मनसा चालीच्य गुरुलाघनं पृथक् करीति, विविच्य च, श्रेय एव चिमावधीते, प्रेयसीइश्विचेततात् श्रेयस: ; यस्तु मन्दव्जि: सहसद्विकासामध्यीत् प्रेय: पुश्पुवादि-सव्यक्ष हवीते' — इत्यादि ।

"The supreme good (ম্ব:) and the mundane good (ম্ব) are confusedly presented to the man. The intelligent compare the two, and on mature reflection discern their relative value—their difference, the supreme good as worthier than the pleasurable. Then they adopt means to the attainment of the End chosen."

We thus compare, estimate our impulses, and they, thus, become objects of our contemplation. A sum-total of feelings, impulses, etc., cannot compare, deliberate and control any more than each feeling and impulse separately. Only a free self can do so which has them, which is above them. In a comparison between the impulses, in a preference among them of what is the highest good, we are agents and we are free. A man thus freely makes a choice from among his several objects of choice and desire which are qualitatively higher; and ultimately chooses what he rationally decides to be his highest-good. If it be true that—I often act in opposition to what is my strongest desire at the present moment, it follows that my self acts independently of pleasure, temperament, habit, etc.—

(कठ-भाष्य, 1.28),

Similar remarks are found embodied in the Gita also"Man is man only so long as his antahkarana is competent to discriminate between right and wrong. When he is unable to do so, he is debarred from attaining the highest of human aspirations. Hence at the very commencement he must rise above the sway of राज रेज— affection for and aversion to the sense-objects or pleasures and pains." He must restrain these natural tendencies, he must exert himself with vigour to resist these natural impulses, and then the action of his will is in an opposite direction."

''महता प्रयासेन खभावप्रवृत्तिनिरोधं कत्वा, प्रतिस्त्रीतः प्रवत्तं निमव, प्रत्यगात्मानं प्रस्नृति ।

(कठ-भाष्य, 4.1)"1

Unrestrained desire works mischief; and urged by uncontrolled desire, the man commits sin and evil. We are bent on selfish ends and are deluded by 'egoism'—when uncontrolled desire urges us to action. We must, therefore, bring our impulses and desires under the law of rational self, into the path of our positive purpose of life which we have deliberately selected and which has filled up our entire being.

The same idea occurs in the Vedanta-bhasya also---" यी हि वहिमुँख: प्रवक्त पुरुष:,...न च तन्न चात्मक्ति पुरुषार्थं सभते ; तं चात्मक्ति-पुरुषार्थां भविकतं, स्वाभाविकात् कार्य-करण-संघातप्रवक्तिगोचरात् विमुखीक्रत्य, प्रत्यगारमस्त्रीतक्ष्त्या प्रवक्तंयक्ति " (वे॰ भा॰, 1.1.4)।

5. The foregoing discussion has brought into clear light an important truth before our not be pursued by the same man as an object of desire. There exists a conflict between the selfish impulsive activities and the realisation of the supreme purpose of life. Both cannot be chosen by a man, as an object for his realisation. There cannot be two ends of his life. Sankara has repeatedly shown that there is eternal conflict (विरोध) between Karma (कार्य) and Jnan (जान). Unless a man feels disgusted (विरक्त) with the pleasure-giving mundane ends, he cannot choose the realisation of self as his supreme and only End of life.

Sankara has expressed his own idea on the subject, thus:—

- (a) "I desire to attain an End which is eternal, imperishable and transcendental; what shall I do with Karma which is opposite to it in its nature?"
- (b) "Light and shade cannot co-exist. Interests in outward activities and interests in the inner self are mutually exclusive. The dualism between the spheres of virtue and prudence is an irreducible dualism whose rival claims it is impossible to adjust."
- (c) "Unless our mind is turned away from the mundane objects, we are unable to devote it to the realisation of the self. You cannot desire both—the outward objects and the inner self at the same moment. There is conflict between the two courses."

- (d) "In the world people revel with mundane goods. It is not so with the wise whose revels are centred in the self alone. For the unwise, there are many pleasures due to the sense-objects. But to the wise, their sole rejoieing proceeds from the self."
- (e) "A distinction has been made between Jnana-nishtha (রাববিস্তা) and Karmanishtha (রাববিস্তা). Vedic works are intended for him only who has desires.
 The renunciation of these works is enjoined on him who seeks only the self."
- (f) "He who wishes to reach the eastern sea, cannot have the same road that the man who wishes to go to the western sea chooses. The difference between the knowledge (রাল) and works (ক্ল) is as wide as between a mountain and a mustard-seed."
- (g) "Emancipation being the result of knowledge, how can a man desire the result of works?"
- 1 (a) '' यहं नित्येन क्रूटखेन यचलिन भुदेनार्धेन यदीं। न तिहपरीतेन। यत: किं क्रिन कर्यंचा चनर्थसाधनिन?'' $(x_1^\circ u)^\circ 1.2.12$ ।
- (b) "न हि वाद्यक्रियावान्, चात्मरतिष भवितुं यक्तः। वाद्यक्रियात्मक्रीइयीः विरीधात्; वाद्यक्रियानिहत्ती हि चात्मक्रीड़ी भवित क्रियत् क्रियत् । न हि तमः- प्रकाशयी युंगपदेकच स्थितिः सन्धवित " (सुं भां , 3.1.4)।

We need not quote further passages. The passages quoted above all declare what really worked in the mind of Sankara, and what led him to make a distinction between ज्ञान and कर्म-knowledge and works. His purpose was not that we are to renounce all works—even the higher moral virtues;—and, as we shall presently see, he was not advocating inertia. These and other similar passages clearly indicate the truth that there can be only one ultimate End of life. ज्ञान and कर्म both cannot constitute the supreme End. Karma (कर्म) done to secure mundane pleasure or goods and Jnana (ज्ञान), i.e., the realisation of the self—cannot both be the ultimate ends of life.

Sankara thus contrasts the result of the two---Jnana (ज्ञान) and Karma (कर्म) :

If you desire the realisation of the self as your highest end, how can you choose works or कसी? For, works or Karma can be chosen only for the following purposes:—

- (i) You can choose Karma, if you are desirous of producing something which is as yet non-existent (उत्पाद). But as the self is what is already in you eternally existent, —how can Karma produce it?
- (ii) If you desire to reach a place or an object, you must perform certain activities or Karma for it (भाष). But the self is what is always within your reach, no Karma is needed at all for it.
- (iii) For the purpose of effecting a change or transformation to a thing, work or Karma may prove necessary (विकार्थ). But as the self is beyond change, as it is subject to no transformation—is immutable—Karma is out of place here.
- (iv) If you desire to effect purification to your mind or something else, work or Karma proves useful for the purpose (संस्कार्य). But what would action do to the self which is always pure?

Now, from the foregoing discussion it follows that there can be but one object of our desire, one supreme end of our life, and that is—the realisation of the self. And works or Karmas are only needed for the purification of our mind or antahkarana.

6. We have seen above that we are naturally selfish

beings. We seek always the gratification of our pleasure, to appropriate which to ourselves, we do not hesitate to work mischief to others. Our mind is, by nature, filled with desire for agreeable objects and aversion to disagreeable—(14-34,—and driven by these impulses, we work blindly for our selfish ends and often quarrel with others to secure pleasure to ourselves. It is absolutely necessary, therefore, for us to purify our mind from these selfish desires and inclinations, and to free it from their influences. Unless this purification can be effected, the realisation of the self is out of the question.

The purification of the mind or antahkarana can be effected by restraining these egoistic impulses and tendencies to action (negatively), and by performing higher kinds of works (positively). By exerting ourselves always for the good of the community and by the performance of unselfish and disinterested works, our mind may become gradually free from selfish passions and desires; and when these impurities are thus removed, it is prepared for the supreme realisation. But a caution is needed here. These unselfish works ought not to be done, nay they cannot be done—as ends-in-themselves. As there can only be one supreme End, viz., the realisation of the self which is the only object of our desire; higher disinterested works can be done only as a means of helping that realisation. This, in brief, is the view of Sankara.

Works done with impulsive and selfish motives have been condemned in the Vedanta, as Sakáma-karmas. And as such works have always been looked upon as the source of bondage, with a view to supplant and supersede these self-seeking activities, higher disinterested kinds of works have been prescribed and the aspirants after emancipation (सुस्क) are called upon to diligently perform such works. These higher works are considered indispensable for the purification of the mind (चित्रपादि or सन्तपादि), infested as it is with selfish impulses and desires. And as these are done for emancipating the mind from the influence of the lower natural tendencies, which would ultimately lead to the realisation of the true self, these works cannot prove a bondage. If, however, the supreme end is forgotten, and these are done as ends-in-themselves, only then they will prove a bondage.

An idea prevails among many that in Sankara's

(1) They are indispensable for purification of mind (ধ্ৰুম্মি). System of Vedanta no room has been left for works and that his aim was to get rid of all works altogether. To our mind, this is an idea which cannot be accepted and which must be condemned as erroneous, with all the emphasis which we can command. We have said above that as our mind is naturally swayed by selfish passions and desires, it needs purification in order to prepare it finally for the realisation of the ultimate End which constitutes the only object of our desire. How this purification is to be executed will appear from the following

(a) "When a man performs higher kinds of works (Nitya-karmas or obligatory works), his mind or antahkarana, unsoiled by

When thus purified, the mind becomes fit for contemplation of the Thus the man whose mind has self. been purified by the performance obligatory works (नियक्की) and who is thus prepared to acquire the self-realisation, may gradually attain to Jnananisthá (the final End)."

- (b) "The three higher kinds of action should be performed; for, they cause purity in those who have no desire for fruits... These actions should be performed by a seeker of liberation, though they form the cause of bondage in the case of one who has an attachment for the actions and a desire for their fruits."
- (c) "The seekers of liberation must perform ritual works and other obligatory duties without any longing for the fruits of such works. When performed, the works prove useful as a means to the birth of spiritual regeneration of the mind (विद्योत्पत्ती)."
- (d) "He who is free from a desire for the fruits of action and performs action as bounden duty (Nitya-karmas)-not as a Kámya-karma; he who performs actions thus, is superior to those who perform action in a different spirit..... (ধলম্বারি) is said to be a Sanyāsin and a Jogin."

(e) "Works are meant for the purification of the mind. Selfish desires and passions are impediments to self-realisation. Unselfish prescribed duties when not done with self-seeking motives remove these impediments, effect purification of the mind, and thus help the final realisation."

We need not multiply instances. Such observations are to be found everywhere in the Vedanta works. The readers will judge for themselves if such observations at all favour the idea of inertia prevalent among the critics of the Sankara's theory. We find Sankara everywhere teaching that higher works which are described as Nityakarmas must be done for the purification of the mind.

But a word of caution is again necessary. These are never to be performed as an End, i.e., as an object of desire. For, as we have seen, there can only be one object of desire,—one End, viz., the realization of the true self.

As a corollary to the above proposition, we may mention here another fact. The section of the Veda reader will find an objection raised by Sankara himself in several places of his works that—if the self-realisation be the only End which we must pursue, all works necessarily become useless. And the work-section (कर्मकाफ) of the Veda—in which rules and prescriptions have been elaborately laid down for the performance of works—does also prove utterly valueless. To meet this objection, Sankara replies:—

"Only the selfish works (Sakamakarmas) are to be considered useless. The higher disinterested works (Nityakarmas) have always a value in the Vedanta; they are never to be considered useless. For they are meant for the purification of the mind. Disinterested works always help the realisation of the self."

The reply suggested by Sankara in his commentary on the Gitá is still more valuable and deserves our particular consideration—"Our theory does not lead to the conclusion that the sruti teaching works proves useless. For, by restraining the first natural activities one after the other, and thereby gradually inducing fresh and higher activities, it serves to create an aspiration to reach the innermost self."

From these passages the readers will find a very clear enunciation of Sankara's position about the works. It is not true that works have no place in his philosophy and that he considered all works as fetters. On the contrary, higher and higher works, as we have just seen, must always be performed—so long as we have not reached the final End where all works, all our duties, find their completion and highest fulfilment—

"न च घसित सम्यग्दर्भने, सब्बोत्मना काम्य-प्रतिषिद्धवर्ज्ञनं केनचित् प्रतिज्ञातुं यकां "— (वि॰ भा॰, 4.3.14); "यत् कर्त्तव्यं तत् सब्बें, भगवत्तत्त्वे विदिते क्षतं भवेत्; न च घन्यथा कर्त्तव्यं परिसनाय्यते कास्यचित्।"—

(गी॰ भाष्य, 15,20)।

But here we must remind the readers of the note of warning which Sankara had sounded. No works, however high their nature, should be done as an end-in-itself; no work ought to be made an object of your desire (न इष्टब्यलेन). For, as an object of desire, work will constitute itself as an end. Wherefore it is that, everywhere it has been laid down that works are not to be performed with a desire for their fruits (দ্বাৰাত্বা). Since, there can only be one object of desire, one ultimate End of life. Works ought not to be abandoned—which is full of impure thoughts and tendencies to activity. Only they must not be done as ends-in-themselves—as if they possess a primary and independent value in themselves. But their performance is always indispensably needed as a means (उपायनेन); they must be utilised by us, so that they may prove useful for the ultimate purpose we have in view, viz., the realisation of the final goal. The works, nay—everything of the world—have value, not as they exist alongside of the Atmá, but only so far as they are used by us—how we use them—

^{*} All the good and disinterested works and virtues are means useful for the realisation of the final End. They are to be looked upon as instruments (साधनानि) which we must use (उपकारक) as helps to the realisation of the self. They have value, only because they are utilised by the self for its own purpose.

In this way, by the performance of disinterested higher

(III) Higher Nitya-Karmas regenerate man from animality to rationality: works, the man is regenerated from the undisciplined 'animality' (पग्रल-भग्रत) to the disciplined 'rationality' (देवल). In the Brihadáranyaka, the yielding of the mind to the natural inclinations and instincts has been called as Ashura-bháva (बसुरभाव-पद्यत), and the doing of higher disinterested works for the good of the community, under the prescriptions of the shastras. with higher and unselfish purposes and inclinations has been designated as Deva-bhava (देवसाव).1 If men follow passively the natural bents of their mind and permit them to become the sole guide of their life, they are no higher than animals. But if they obey the injunctions of the sastras and work for social good and public utility-such disinterested motives and works will exalt them to the higher attributes of benevolent gods (देवल). This high lesson the Vedanta teaches. How to make men possessors of godly qualities while on earth is the aim of Vedanta. But here again the Vedanta has not stopped. Its ultimate aim is to carry the man beyond the world to final realisation and to fulfil his transcendental destiny.

7. We have said that the higher forms of works-

Higher, disinterested works cannot be hypostatised as an End.
Two reasons stated.
They are to be used as a means.

Nityakarmas—works done with disinterested motives cannot be treated as ends-in-themselves, but always as means—as a sádhana (মাখন) usefui, through the purification of mind, for

If, however, these works are treated as ends, as is generally done, some serious consequences will follow. Let us consider these consequences now.

We are all members of a social whole. We belong to Varnásrama-community, of which we are the members. Certain rules and laws we find recorded in the sástras for our guidance. These laws are authoritative for us: because they form the collective experiences and opinions of the best selves of the community. It is generally held that certain rules and acts which have been evolved within the community for its own preservation, are imposed upon its individual members, so that each of them may observe and act up to these rules. Thus the preservation or the good of the community becomes the End for which the individual members live and act. These actions are known as Varnásrama-Dharma (वर्णायम-धर्म) and we must all perform these Dharmas or duties for the good of the Varnásrama-community, of which we, as members, form parts. Its prescriptions (বিখি) and its prohibitions (বিষ্) are all binding upon us which each of us must obev. This is the generally accepted and usual view with regard to Varnāsrama-Dharma. The individuals can have no other purpose in their life, but to perform these duties or Dharmas. Regarded in this way the individuals have only an instrumental value; -they are reduced to a machine somehow constructed to produce certain works beyond themselves, for the good of the community. They exist for these duties which they owe to the community of which they form quite an insignificant part; they have value only for these works. The community thus annexes the individuals to itself. The moral value of the individuals entirely depends upon their works-their servicetheir utility—to the community as a whole. Their moral criterion is judged only by some outward result which they can produce. The individual is thus entirely resolved into his works. If the outward works are regarded as ends in themselves, such inevitable consequence is bound to follow.

But this cannot be the right view of the works. Sankara urges his objections against this view of the works thus—

He points out-

(I) Man cannot be made an object of command (नियोग-विषय) from outside. Man is not a thing to be passively moulded and shaped from outside. He may be persuaded from the inner side, not controlled passively from the outside. Sankara has told us that—

ज्ञापकं हि धास्त्रं, न कारकं।

"Man chooses his end according to his own light. The Sastras only present before him the lower and higher lines of conduct, but do not compel him to select a particular course of action. The Sastras do not mould the man to their own ideas of good; they can only appeal to his inner self.?

PLACE OF ETHICS AND RELIGION IN VEDANTA 207

- (II) Again, Sankara points out that the ideas of good works (virtues) and bad works (vices) evolved within the community cannot be regarded as ends in themselves. For, he says, we find the ideas of virtue and vice in a particular epoch of society differ from the ideas of virtue and vice in the next or another epoch. Again, "in the same epoch of the community different people select different works as ends." "What are looked upon as good works in a particular time and place are regarded otherwise in a different time and place." "2
- (III) It is also laid down in the Vedantabhasya that "in the progressively higher and higher worlds, the virtues and vices are being evolved in higher and higher forms up to Brahma-loka where they are perfected."³
- ' " उपासनेषु पूर्व्य सात् फलविश्रेषं उत्तरस्थिन् उपासने दर्धयित।... इष्टातम्बले तु क्यं फलविश्रेष: स्थात् इष्टाणीऽविश्यित्रलात्" (वि॰भा॰, 4.3.16)। "विद्या-'साधन" स्विशेषविश्रेषात् स्वफले एव विद्यायां, i.e., virtues किस्त्त् प्रतिथयं चासम्बयेत्।..... न विद्या-'फल' सुन्ती ।.... सुन्तावि उत्कर्ष-निकर्षारमकीऽतिथय: उपपदाते।..... तस्यां चिराव्यित्यान्तिक्योऽतिथयो भवन् भवेत् " (वि॰भा॰, 3.4.52)।
- "तथाच यागाधतुष्ठायिनाचेव विद्यासमाधिविशेषात् छत्तरेच पथा गमनं ; केवलैरिष्टापूर्त्तदत्तसाधनै: दिच्चिन पथा ।...तवापि साधन-तारतम्यं श्रूयते " (वे॰ भा॰, 1.1.4) ।
- " यखिन् देशे काले निमित्त च यो भन्नीं (तुष्ठीयते, स एव देशकालनिमित्तासदेषु सम्बद्धी भवति " (व॰, 3.1,25)।
- ै '' मनुष्यलादारम्य ब्रह्मान्ते जु देश्वरसु सुखतारतन्त्रं चनुत्र्यते, तत्त्व तद्वेती- धं चौस्यापि तारतन्त्रं गन्यते '' (वे॰, 1.1.4).

All these clearly show that virtues (and vices) are constantly evolving in higher and higher forms, and they are constantly growing with the progressively growing communities and the worlds. They cannot therefore be regarded as the ultimate end of life.

We can do no better than to repeat in this place the utterances of Sarkara himself which embody his general views on the Varnasrama-duties (बचीयम-पक्ष). These remarks are important and we invite particular attention of our readers to them. These remarks bring the relation between the higher karmas (क्य) and Jnana (जान) very forcibly home to the mind; and the valuable bearing which the works have upon the self-realisation stands palpably revealed. Sankara writes—

(Gita-bhásya, 18.44.45.)

"Can this perfection be attained directly by the mere performance of one's duty? No;—how then?The perfection

In this manner-

"the works which are held as a bondage are converted into a means for self-realisation." 2

From these observations, we can now conclude that the works (Karma) when regarded as ends, as objects of desire—do prove a bondage, and they come into conflict with the Jnána (i.e., the self-realisation). But taken as a means, and used as such, this conflict (art) between them vanishes, and instead of offering opposition to Jnána, the works prove a very useful ally—

"तेषां निरिभस्योनां नित्यानां कर्यायां पारादुपकारकतात्, मोच-साधनान्यपि कम्मीण भवनौति—न विक्ष्यते (३° भा°, 3.3.1)।"

The right, therefore, of Karma as separate and rival interests, as rival ends-in-themselves—must die; because Karma is superseded and included in one supreme interest or end of life. All works thus become an element in this one interest, and organic to this one central purpose.³

 $^{^1}$ " किंखकर्या तुष्ठानत एव खाचात् संसिद्धिः ? $^{\circ}$ तथं तर्ष्टिं ? $^{\circ}$ स्वकर्याया तमीयां प्रभ्य के केवलं, ज्ञानिष्ठायीग्यतालच्यां सिद्धिं विन्दित मानवः $^{\circ}$ । $^{\circ}$ से चफलावसाना " (गै $^{\circ}$, 18.45).

All works now become the medium, the vehicle, the opportunity, for the realisation, in and through them, of the spiritual purpose—

" सर्बे कमाखिलं पार्थ ज्ञाने परिसमाप्यते। " 4.33.

8. The foregoing discussion has brought us to the conclusion that the life of higher works—of unselfish virtuous deeds, is not the ultimate goal of human life. Virtuous deeds possess value in that they purge our mind from selfish, self-seeking propensities which know no other higher end than gratification of the sense-pleasures, and thus to prepare it for the realisation which alone constitutes the ultimate goal of our life. One deed of virtue leads to another, which again leads to a still higher deed of virtue and so on perpetually. Sankara has pointed out that one work done is succeeded by another work which awaits you for its accomplishment 1 Moral or virtuous life is therefore a life of incessant endeavours for. and aspirations after, higher and higher virtues (प्रश्रीतकर्ष), which cannot be completed here under mundane conditions. It is, thus, a life of constant progress; it is marked by incessant advancement from lower to higher deeds; such a life therefore cannot itself be an end but always points to the End, to a goal beyond it, where all its aspirations after higher and higher goods will reach their fulfilment and complete satisfaction. 2 Thus, the human life of virtue will reach its perfection in a Transcendental goal which is the End towards which it is perpetually moving.

We have seen before that the performance of higher works and virtuous deeds is not an end in itself—is not the ultimate goal of human life. These virtuous deeds are needed for the purification of our mind from selfish propensities and tendencies and for constant preparation for the ultimate End. The higher works, in this way, prove to be an indirect cause for the attainment of Mukti or the final goal. They cannot directly produce Mukti; for, in that case, these works would themselves become the ultimate End. The readers will realise that Sankara's position in this respect remains logically unassailable. As the ultimate goal is transcendent, no mundane works or attributes can have power to directly produce it. For, in that case, what is transcendent would become merely mundane; -the distinction between the two worlds or lives would disappear: the mundane works would themselves become the final end or goal: mere performance of higher works would give us perfection, and moral life, as it is known to us here, will cease. In the system of Sankara, ethical or moral progress points to a transcendental goal beyond, where the infinite aspirations after higher and higher deeds will reach final satisfaction and all our higher and higher desires and aspirations reach final fulfilment.1 morality or ethics ends in religion, in the Vedanta system; it cannot be pursued for its own sake. Ethics, without religion for its fulfilment, is incomplete. Hence we find that the life's End cannot be realised ultimately, merely by the performance of civic duties or वर्षायमध्यी ' which we have already considered. All the life's duties reach their final fulfilment in a higher life than this, i.e., in a transcendetal goal .--

² There must therefore always be a negative relation between the mundane life (and its works) and its transcendental goal (towards which it moves and where it will be perfected). Yet it is the same life. This mundane life would become transformed into supra-mundane life.

 $^{^1}$ " चन्यमिदं प्रमाणं...नात:परं किश्चित् चाकाश्चमित्त । न तु चारमैकलव्यितिरेकेण चविष्यमानीऽयीऽयीऽित्त, यः चाकाश्चेतः " (वेदा $^\circ$ भा $^\circ$ 2.1.14) $_1...$ " पुरुषार्थसमाप्तितु चुप्रस्तिः...नथै व च विदुषां तुष्प्रसुभवादिस्भैनात् " (4.3.14).

9. We are now in a position to enumerate some of the higher virtues, ethical and moral qualities, the cultivation of which has been deemed useful for the realisation of the self, through the purification of the mind. But before we proceed to do so, it may be found instructive to make a rapid survey of the entire position which we have tried to sketch in the preceding pages.

Man is, we have found, naturally a selfish and egoistic being, seeking the gratification of his own pleasure and depriving others of it; and all his activities are impelled by impulsive, self-seeking motives. As man is thus subject to sensibility, he commits sin and evil, under its influence. But man is also a higher being in whom God has been revealed, and a life of infinite Divine possibility is implanted in him, and this is the true man within him. Man is thus endowed with a discriminative knowledge of right and wrong.—

"The ignorant, natural man regards desire (মান-ক্ষ) as a friend at the time when he thirsts for objects. The mind, when allowed to be engrossed in the thoughts of various pleasurable objects, loses its discriminative knowledge of the self and the not-self and turns towards the senseobjects." But as man is a rational animal, he must bring his impulses under the law of the rational self which those desires envelop. In fact, he exerts himself actively with vigour to resist and control such impulses and consequently his action is in an opposite direction—

" पारमवधौ विधेयात्मा विषयानिन्द्रियेयरन् "।

Sankara further observes-

"Man is man only so long as his Antahkarana is competent to discriminate between right and wrong. When he is unable to do so he is debarred from attaining the highest of human aspirations (परम-पर्सवार्थ). Hence at the commencement, he must rise above the sway of राग-चेष-affection for aversion to sense objects of pleasure and He must restrain these natural tendencies by means of their enemy, i.e., by actively cultivating the virtues, which are the enemies (ঘ্রিঘ্ছ) of love and aversion."

When the man, thus, cultivates these ethical and moral virtues, he is no longer subject to his own nature (সভান). These virtues are the means (রাল-মাখন) for attaining the self-knowledge which is his highest end.¹ Natural राग-पेष creates the idea of separateness or exclusiveness; but as these are supplanted by the moral virtues, his true unity with his fellow-beings will gradually remove this idea of exclusiveness.² The term देशी-सम्पत् (Daivi-Sampat) used in the Gita covers under it the virtues which man must cultivate in the place of the natural selfish impulses for which the term भारति-सम्पत् (Åsurî-Sampat) has been used.³ These virtues have been described as—

"the virtues leading to liberation from Samsára."

Is it not, we ask, wrong, in the face of all these remarks of Sankara, to suppose—as has been supposed by many—that the Vedanta "insists upon the emptying of the human mind, making it a barren desert?" Is it not wrong to hold that "no moral virtues are taught in the Vedanta" and that "all actions are treated as a bondage and therefore liberation from this bondage is the goal or aim of the Vedanta?"

From what has been stated above, the readers must have seen that such remarks as these⁴ do the greatest injustice to Sankara's own views and his writings.

¹ These are called as अर्मपूर्ग (गी॰ भा॰, 12.13) and they are means of the highest realisation.

Man cannot find final satisfaction of his self in any earthly and temporal order of things. Nothing short of a Transcendental good He seeks in Brahman the fulfilment satisfies man. of the good he is trying to realise in his own life. The supreme good (प्रियतम)-which is working and revealing itself in the worldly objects, -of which they are but imperfect manifestations—is the highest end of human pursuits. The higher and lower objects are therefore only the proximate ends and these can be made to be embraced and included in the supreme End. But as Brahman transcends the temporal order of things, man must not rest satisfied with these lesser ends, but must move through them for a final realisation of the supreme good 1-

> " भयमारमा सब्बेलीकिक प्रियेश्यः प्रियतमी भवति । तस्रात् तङ्काभे महाम् यत्र भास्ये यः । " 1.4.8.

The self-realisation, therefore, is the life's highest End. This End, says Sankara, which has been deliberately chosen, must be steadily kept in view and resolutely maintained against all other partial interests and ends.² For, it is only when one perceives the End of knowledge that one will endeavour to cultivate the attributes which are the means of attaining that knowledge.³ The inner purity of the mind consists of the removal from it of the stain of attachment and other passions (राज-देवादि), by cultivating the ideas that are inimical to them.¹ "These attributes or moral virtues are conducive to knowledge. What are opposed to these, viz., pride, hypocrisy, ignorance, cruelty, insincerity, impatience—should be shunned as tending to bondage and samsdra."²

A glance at these 'moral virtues' as elaborated and explained by Sankara in his commentaries on the Gitá and the Upanishads will convince one of their social or civic character, and their inestimable value will be found in our daily and hourly dealings with our fellow-beings. If one fails or neglects to cultivate these virtues, the purification of the mind or inner organ which is naturally vitiated by impure thoughts and impulsive tendencies would be hindered and the possibility of self-expansion and self-realisation would be debarred.

10. We now proceed to give below a list of these virtues (খৰ্ম-খুন) and must rest content with referring our readers to the elaborate explanation of each of the factors constituting this list, as given in the commentaries of Sankara.

The ethical or moral virtues to be cultivated are—

^{े &}quot; अन्तव मनसः 'प्रतिपचभावनया' (अमानिल-मैत्रीकरुणादोनां भावनया— (म्यु॰ द्रीका) रागादिमलापनयनं ''' (गी॰ भा॰, 13.7)। " एतै: हि संस्कृतस्त्र सस्त्रपुद्धिद्दारा तस्त्रज्ञानीत्पत्तिः दृष्टा " (कैन॰ भा॰, 4.8)।

(a) The first group of moral virtues described by Patanjali in his Yoga-philosophy is this—

मैची-करुषा-मुदितीपेचाचां

Before we proceed to explain this group, we should like to invite our readers' attention to the remarks made by Madhusūdana when elaborating the commentaries of Sankara on the moral virtues enumerated in the Gitá. Madhusūdana observes to the effect that this group of moral virtues together with the two other groups given in the Gitá—form three groups and all these must be cultivated. These virtues properly cultivated and developed would remove and supplant the natural evil desires (राज-देवादि) and gradually create the healthy idea of our unity with our fellow-beings.

Now, to explain the first group stated above—
" hat or sympathy is the identity of feeling with the object of the emotion which one experiences on seeing happiness or misery.
If we see one happy, our feeling must be identical. Compassion (() is the same feeling for misery of whatever kind. It implies, besides the emotion, action, on the part of him who feels the emotion, as lies in his power. Complacency (प्रतिता) is joy at the sight of virtue and the sacrifices incidental to its practice. As to vice which enters so largely in the composition of the human society, the least that one should do is entire indifference (उपेपा). If he can help to cure the one and remove the other, it is sacrifice of a superior kind; but generally indifference is the best attitude to maintain."

(b) The second group of moral virtues is given and explained in Gitá-bhásya 13.7-11—Absence of self-esteem and self-assertion; doing no injury to any living being, and not being affected when others have done any injury; inner purity? consisting in the removal from the mind of the stain of attachment and other passions; direction, to the right path, of the body and its organs which are naturally attracted in all directions; thinking of what evil there is in birth, age, disease and death; non-attachment to things which may form object of attachment; constant

equanimity consisting in not being jubilant over attaining the desirable and in not chafing on attaining the undesirable; the society of disciplined men, because such society is an aid to self-realisation and distaste for society of ordinary undisciplined men." 1

(c) The Third group is embodied in Gitabhasya, 16.1.3—

"Abandonment of deception, dissimulation, falsehood and the like, in all our practical transactions; reflection and recognition of the true nature of things (ৰন্ধৰে)²; concentration through the subjugation of the senses; constant steadiness of our attitude; abstaining from injury to sentient beings; speaking of things as they are without giving utterance to what is unpleasant or false; suppression of anger arising when reviled or beaten; compassion to those in suffering; absence of fickleness." ⁸

- (d) It has been laid down as a general principle that those characteristics in the disposition and conduct, which have grown habitual and natural with a Mukta, i.e., a man who has already realised the ultimate good are to be considered as the Sádhanas for a Mumukshu, i.e., an aspirant after self-realisation. With diligence and good care these are to be constantly cultivated as virtues by him. 1
- (e) The surrender of the self to the supreme self (i.e., Brahman) and meditation on His Swarūpa. A man cannot hope to be Mukta, unless Brahman's grace falls upon him, unless He helps him graciously in the task" 1—

In connection with the cultivation of these ethical virtues, Sankara has remarked at one place that these virtues cannot be developed in a day or two, but it requires time to gradually make them more and more matured (परिपान), developed and perfected. So long as these are not perfected, the self-realisation would remain incomplete. It is necessary therefore to make life-long endeavours towards the maturity and perfection of these virtues, so that man may gain a thorough and perfect mastery over the impulsive self (प्रतिप्रकाशका), such that his true self may be realised in it.²

(f) For the completion of the list on the moral virtues, we must mention here the fact that the list includes in it the performance of certain ritual works (যা)—Yajnas—which, when done with a higher motive for the final realisation, certainly help the purification (হাল-মান্ত) of the mind which forms the object of all other higher works or virtues.

The views of Sankara on the Yajnas (यπ) will appear in the following paragraphs where we have gathered together his opinions, for the benefit of our readers:—

Certain portions of those Upanishads which are regarded as most reliable and ancient are found to contain discussions about the manner in which Yajnas are to be performed. This shows that कसीकाण्ड is not really antagonistic to the সালকাজ as some scholars hold. The former has an intimate relation to the latter, and far from being hostile it forms a necessary part of the latter. There is no real conflict between the two sections of the Veda. The purpose of the rituals is to purify mind-exclusively and deeply engrossed in the attachment for the pleasure-giving sensible objects, 1 so as to prepare it for the dawn of perfect knowledge. The actions which are done from a lower motive for the enjoyment of pleasure, and which have only selfish and self-seeking ends-bave been condemned Those who are naturally as Sakáma. selfish and are deeply absorbed in the sensual pleasures and worldly objects, cannot at once be raised to the contemplation of an ideal which is exalted beyond all sensual conditions. Their minds are to be gradually worked upon by the gradual change of the ideal to which they are attached.1

Three different ideals for three different classes of people according to three distinct types of culture received by them have been laid down side by side in the Rig-Veda³; and these three types of people are to be found, we believe, in every stage of society.—

- (a) Those who travelled on the lowest plane and whose mind could not and did not receive any spiritual culture, and who had desires and longings for self-seeking pleasures, worshipped the gods; and to these, the gods appeared endowed with sensible attributes and each seemed to have a distinct existence of its own and each capable of fulfilling the desires of the devotees.
- (b) But to the people of higher types, these gods appeared not as self-existing and independent entities, but only manifestations of one Power working within them

- and realising its purpose in and through these manifestations. For these, the Veda has enjoined "conjunction of work with knowledge" (जानकवी-सस्वत).
- (c) But there are still higher types of people to whom, owing to the superior spiritual culture they received through good works done in the previous states of existence, the Veda holds out the ideal of Brahman -both immanent and transcendent-and for these, no ritual duties were thought useful and necessary, but only the exercise and repetition of contemplation, altruistic thoughts and works, cultivation of moral virtues ('पमानिलादि') were deemed as the only means for the attainment of this ideal. क्योंकाल has, thus, its own efficacy and purpose and is not in any way conflicting and antagonistic to the We for these reasons find it difficult to ubscribe to the view that at the Vedic period the Vedic people could not rise above the idea of a duality and from the planes of selfish ends.1

Such, is brief, is the view of Sankara on the Karma-kanda of the Veda and in this manner he has attempted a reconciliation of the Karma section with Jnana section of the Veda—

¹ We cannot also agree with the view that the Vedic people—one and all without exception—could not rise to the grasp of the highest unity and—and that all of them worshipped as gods the striking phenomena of nature which by their grand and impressive features captured their imagination. This view goes against the conclusion arrived at by Sankaracharyya and others.

- Certain anomalous sion, we must try to estimate the real purport of certain passages found scattered in the Bhasyas of Sankara which may, possibly, create some confusion in the mind of the readers.
 - (i) Let us first consider such passages in which "abandonment of all kinds of works" - has been taught.² Such passages, to all outward appearances, demand, no doubt, from all, the renouncement of all sorts of works including even the disinterested higher nitya-karmas. But when these passages are considered, not isolating them from, but taking and reading them in connection with, the contexts in which they occur, and in the light Sankara's general position on the Karmas which we have tried to exhibit in this chapter,-the right import and true solution of these passages cannot but stand revealed before the readers in heir own light.

When an aspirant has already attained the self-knowledge, has reached the final goal, no further need arises for him to perform any kind of works-lower or higher. Sankara suggests this truth in the line-

" उत्पन्नात्मविद्यस्य तु त्रनारन्यः निर्धंकलातु "--

(केन-वा-भा॰, 1.1)।

For, when the man has attained the Transcendental goal (ब्रह्माकाभाव:). all his duties have reached their fulfilment. contrast between lower and higher works, all succession of time-order, all his higher and higher endeavours and aspirations have ceased for him to have any further meaning.1 "For him who has realised the Atmá, no further work remains to be done."-

" न चैवमात्मान मनुभवतः निचिद्च्यत् क्रत्यं श्रवशिष्यते"। (वे॰ भा॰, 4.1,2)।

We find therefore that the "abandonment of works" mentioned in those passages is meant only for the 'Atma-vid,' i.e., for those who have already realised the final End, which is the completion of all desire.

(ii) We now come to consider the nature of some other passages. There are some passages in the Bhásyas, which speak of the higher Nitya-karma in terms no better than the Sakama impulsive Like our selfish works the activities. nitya-karmas are sometimes described as the "product of avidya, and of love and hatred (राग-रेप)." Take such passages as—i.e., the Nitya-karmas are done by him who is influenced by passions and other lower tendencies.

" यद्यपि शास्त्रावगतं नित्यं कर्स्यं, तथापि चित्रयावत एव भवति "—

(গী॰ भा॰, 18.66)

For the solution of this apparent difficulty, we must call our reader's attention to the fact that our outward actions are always the outcome of our inner motives, and intentions; -our outward works entirely depend upon our inner motives. which they are the expressions. It follows therefore that our selfish activities may, by changing our inner motives, be converted into disinterested actions; and our un-selfish works might change their disinterested character, if they are done with selfish ends in view. Sankara's idea is—' even the virtuous deeds (খ্যান্ত্ৰীs) may be done with a lower motive-with a desire to gain some mundane end, such as social position, prosperity, higher regions or Devatâs, and the like; and when so performed, the virtuous deeds become ends in themselves, not means. His idea therefore is that the value must be placed not upon the outward deeds—not even upon virtuous deeds—but upon the inner intention.

' Cf. विषयप्राप्तिनिमित्तं कामा: पुत्रवान् नियोज्यन्ति तेषु तेषु विषयेषु...तै: भक्षे। भक्षेप्रवित्ति तेषु तेषु विषयेषु...तै: भक्षे। भक्षेप्रवित्ति तेषु तेषु विषयेषु...तै: भक्षे। भक्षेप्रवित्ति तेषु तेषु विषयेषु...तै: भक्षे। भा°, 3.2.2). Also cf. such passage—" काम-क्रीभादिपूर्णक-पुष्प्रापुष्णकारिता......संसारस्य कारचं" (डि॰मा॰, 4.4.5). "क्षोक-व्रयसाधनं...सासुयं वित्तं क्रकंडपं पितृक्षोकप्राप्तिसाधनं विद्याष्य देवं वित्रं देवलीकप्राप्तिसाधनं....... धविद्याक्ष तेषे। पितृक्षोकप्राप्तिसाधनं विद्याष्य देवं वित्रं देवलीकप्राप्तिसाधनं...... धविद्याक्षाकानवत एव स्वर्णीय क्रकंषि क्रकंषिय (तौ॰, 2.11)।

Man has always an infinite possibility either for good, or for evil; man's nature cannot be exhaustively expressed in his past and present achievements. Man is always more than what he actually is. If he allows himself to be passively guided by the impulses (খৰিবাছৰ), his actions are selfish. If he keeps himself alive to his rational nature, he is unselfish.

Thus the apparent difficulty is solved.

12. We ought to look upon the world of emergent nâma-rūpas from the standpoint of unity, always in connection with the underlying Brahman. In that case, no difference, no भेद, will appear to us. All the so-called differences would appear as higher and higher revelations of that underlying unity.

But such is the perversity of the human intellect that we ignore the underlying unity and identify it with the emergent nama-rūpas. And the emergent differences alone become the only standpoint to us from which we look upon the world. Everything appears to be composed of parts (भव्यव) and one part lying outside another part and one part being distinct and different from another part—

खाभाविका भविद्यया...नाम-रूपोपाधि-दृष्टिरेव भवति खाभाविकी "-

This false view of the world is entirely due to our avidyá, our intellectual error. It is our intellect which entirely identifies the underlying unity with the emergent differences and thus imagines parts in the unity. Really there can be no such identity. The underlying Brahman

There are people who from the use of the term [चराकल्पना conclude that the विकारs are all our mental phantasm and these are nareal. But that is not the true sense.

[া] In तै॰ आ॰ Sankara has shown that ष्विद्या is not अर्थ or property of the self. It is the property of our intellect, understanding $(\hat{\pi}^{\circ}, 2.8)$ (In°; °, S. calls it चित्रकरणना and इन्द्रिय-प्रज्ञा).

² As there is always an unchanging ground in which the changing [बकारड are grounded (1.3.1., ने° भा°), we are liable to take these as parts of the ground of which it is composed. It is विकल्पना, बुद्धिए. We must keep the ground apart from the विकारs.

retains its unity, maintains its own nature, in these emerging diversities of nâma-rupa. Sankara has pointed out—

" न हि वृद्धिपरिकल्पितेन श्रवयवेन परमार्थतः सावयवं वस्तु भवति "—1

i.e., our intellect has no power to effect any actual change in the object. The unity does not change to multiplicity, simply because our intellect imagines parts (अवस्व) in it, identifies the two.

"Can the mirage actually wet the surface of the desert?"

We must make earnest effort to change our intellectual outlook. We must try to look upon the world from the standpoint of the unity, from the standpoint of Brahman. Sankara says—

"There can be no object—subtle or gross—past or present—distant or near—which can remain separated from the underlying Brahman—either in space or in time."

"न हि चात्मनीऽन्यत्...तत्-प्रविभक्तदेशकालं सूक्तं व्यविहतं भूतं भविष्यदा वस्तु विद्यते ''— (तै° भा°, २।६) ।

No difference will appear again to our changed outlook now, as it used to appear before. Everything—all differences of nama-rūpa will now appear as revelations of Brahman's nature, as higher and higher manifestations of the underlying unity which is realising itself in them. The diversities of nama-rūpa being only the manifestations of Brahman's nature, how can these have a nature of their own which can be called different from the nature of Brahman? It is the self-same nature of Brahman which is present before us now in the form of diverse nama-rupas. Hence, this world of nama-rupas cannot be looked upon as something different from the nature of Brahman. They are merely the expressions of the nature of Brahman, which we used to call erroneously as this or that thing, which we so long used to regard as different from Brahman. And this idea of separateness (भेदन्डि—चन्यल-नोप) is due to the deep-rooted and inveterate error of our intellect (परिवा). This erroneous idea, says Sankara, stands between our self and Mukti or the final realisation. All our endeavours are to be directed to the extirpation of this illusion born of the habits of our thought.2 All phenomenal objects, all activities are to be looked upon as means, instruments (ब्रह्मदर्भेनीपायलेनेव) for the realisation of the Divine Purpose working in them. Sankara calls this-Sarvatma-bhava (सम्बोताभाव). This idea of सम्बोताभाव, i.e., the idea of taking all emergent nama-rūpas, all emergent activities, as higher and higher expressions of the Divine purpose is substitute the former false idea, i.e., the idea of separateness (चनात्वीप). When this सम्बोताभाव is firmly established in the place of प्रवासि Mukti or the final realisation is reached. This is Mukti in the Sankara's system.1

The individual Ego is not a component part, a mere phase, of Brahman. But as we have already seen, all Egos have a 'nature,' have infinite possibility in them; and this possibility has become so far expressed in our actual states and activities. Through our constant endeavour, through the constant cultivation of the moral virtues and performance of higher moral works, and also by विचार " we must purify our sense-organs, manas, intellect and our mental capacities more and more. We shall, then, te able to comprehend and realise more and more, through these. the infinite wealth of the inexhaustible nature of Brahman which is present in our finite self as the infinite possibility or purpose. In our higher and higher progress to the higher and higher worlds, we shall build up higher organisms. And through these higher organs and organisms, we would be able realise Brahman in a higher and superior form. In this progress, there is no breach of memory.

This realisation, by the Ego, of the inexhaustible Brahman in him has been beautifully described by Sankara by an illustration. "The union of man with Brahman," he says, "is like the union between man and his beloved wife in marriage." "When a man embraces in love and affection his beloved wife, he forgets the presence of the objects near him and loses his consciousness of himself and everything else in the perfect happiness born of this mutual union." The readers will realise from this illustration that this सञ्चीतमान, the result of the union—is not the actual abolition of the objects of the world as unreal, leaving Brahman as the only reality. This is also not the absorption of the Ego in Brahman—which is his true essence.

And this सब्बोरम भाव is the Vedantic Mukti;—it is simply the cessation of the idea of separateness or अवात-वीध-

- ² It is simply looking upon everything as not 'anya' (बाब) from the self. "ट्रष्टु 'र्व्यलेन' सब्बें यां भावात् न पञ्चति...सुक्तस्यापि सब्बें कलात् समानीहितीयाभाव:—'केन कं पञ्चत्?' इति च उक्तमेव'' (इर्ष भा°, 8.12.3). [For the sense of 'केन कं पञ्चत्?'—vide Chap. III of this book where such expressions have been explained.]
- ³ As an example of सक्वीरमभाव, Sankara (वे° भा°, 1.1.4) has quoted the Vedic sentence भूडं मनुरभवं स्थ्येष, etc., etc., and this he takes as " ब्रह्मदर्भन" which shows that when सक्वीरमभाव is realised, the existence of मनु, स्थ्ये and other objects of the world is not abolished. These objects will then be looked upon as simply the expressions of ब्रह्म's nature (ब्रह्मदर्भनीपायलेनेव) and hence they are not something भून्य absolutely, but there is unity in difference. Readers are requested to note this. Similarly in ते°, in describing the experience of a सुत्त पुरुष it is stated as "भूड्मक्र" भूड्मक्राइं...सब्बीनन्यलेन गायन्," etc. Here also, everything appears to a सुत्त वि अन्य ' really. There is no question of abolition at all.

Cf. also what Sankara has spoken of a सुक्तपुरुष — " एव विशेषो विदुषां, नश्चन्तीऽपि प्रपच-संसारं। पृथगारमनी न पश्चे तु"—चारमनिरुपण (१००)।

EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS.

- 1. Professor A. Berriedale Keith, D.Litt., D.C.I., University of Edinburgh—
- "...... Your book is a remarkably able and highly interesting contribution to the interpretation of Sankara. Its collection of passages alone would be of very high value, for the extent of Sankara's writings is so great as to render easy reference impossible without such aid, and I fully appreciate the labour which has been involved in the selection of the texts cited. Even greater value applies to your powerful exposition of the realistic element in Sankara. Your restatement of his position in terms of modern philosophical conception shows very great skill and will demand the most careful consideration from those who seek to apprehend the true force of the teachings of the Acharyya. It is a striking tribute to his great philosophical power that the question of the interpretation of his doctrines still presents the most interesting problem of Indian Philosophy......I shall not fail to mention your work in my next publication now in the press....."
- 2. Professor S. Y. Lesny, Ph.D., University of Prague, Austria—
- "I have read your valuable book with great interest. It will be reviewed by me in one of our periodicals, but it can be said at once, that the teaching of your great countryman—Sankara—has been treated by you in a very happy way and to much profit of your readers. The problem of Sankara's Adwaita Philosophy is complicated and I am of opinion that our understanding of his teaching may be far more furthered by Indian scholars and books like yours which treat the problem in a scholarly way, than by European scholars who very often treat the matter too much in the light of our European Philosophy......

 There is one point more which I like in your book, that are the accurate quotations, at least as far as I can see. The merit of the book is not diminished by some misprints, as for instance Asat-karjya-váda instead of—(káryya).....on the whole, your work displays complete acquaintance with the problems derived certainly from the extensive reading of Sankara's writings."
- 3. Professor E. Washburn Hopkins, Ph.D., LL.D., Yale University, America—
- "I beg leave to acknowledge with many thanks the receipt of your very valuable book, Adwaita Philosophy, which has been at hand for some months. I should have thanked you for it before, but I wanted to study it first......Now to speak of the book itself, I will confess that at first it rather bewildered me, since in several particulars it contravenes general opinion very drastically. But on a second reading, which I found necessary owing to the weighty matter in it (for though the book is small it is of profound significance), I discovered that my primary revolt against your conclusions diminished in proportion as I read more carefully your citations tending to uphold your contentions stey by step. My final judgment is that you have made a most important contribution to our knowledge of Sankara's Philosophy. Your powerful analysis of the Iswara idea and of the Ego leaves the onus probandi on the shoulders of those who would still believe in an unreal God and empty individual self. Having just published a little book on Hindu Ethics. I was particularly interested in your final words on the Ethical reality of the Vedanta and am glad to see so forcible a presentation of this matter. As I have phrased it in my book-" there can be no religion without morality, no morality without religion" (In B. G. and Vedanta). I have not yet done with your "Adwaita," in fact I wish to go through your citations again and perhaps make public note of your position. In my view, you have done a great service in composing this work."

4. Prof. Julius Jolly, Ph.D., University of Wurzburg, Bavaria—
"Your valuable book has been duly received. This work contains an excellent exposition, I think, of the main principles of the Adwaita system and an equally excellent vindication of this against the reproaches raised by scholars wrongly interpreting its technical terms. The numerous original Sanskrit texts quoted in your work make it easy to control the doctrines contained in it. It is to be certainly hoped that the study of your work will give a just impetus to Adwaita Philosophy both in India and in Western countries, and will remove the misunderstandings concerning it."

Prof. Louis De la Vallee-Poussin, University of Brussels, Belgium—

"I am happy to say that I have read your book with great pleasure. I am willing also to think that the views of many controversists on this great system are wrong, because they do not realise that Sankara, although he is a great rationalist, is also a mystic. It is not the intention of Sankara to deny the existence of a personal, all-knowing and all-powerful God, nor the existence of the human souls, or of the world. I believe that your great endeavour—" " The Tar.: " to purify the Mimansa from all misinterpretations—" " To on the whole successful. Do you not admit that there are in his system a number of theses which obscure this general tendency and the main lines? Máyá—was an unfortunate word to express the idea that the "Transcendental one" is able to create beings who are not its substratum, although their existence depends upon it;—beings who are both Swártha and Parártha. I beg you to accept my best thanks and to believe that I very strongly sympathise with your work."

6. Prof. J. H. Mulrhead, M.A., LL.D., University of Birming-ham-

"...... I have read the Central Chapter on the 'Pure Ego as Active Power' and find it so entirely on the line of my own thought in connexion with what I am at present writing that even although the book had not been your gift I should have desired to write to thank you for the valuable help I have got from it. I think that now we have from Professor Radhakrishnan and others competent histories of Indian philosophy as a whole, the next step is more detailed work such as yours, and I think nothing could be more valuable than your book.....I hope you will pursue your admirable researches and publish them as opportunities come."

7. Professor Rudolph Otto, Ph.D., of Marburg, Germany-

"Many thanks for your very interesting book. You emphasise correctly those elements in Sankara which people had so long very much neglected. On the whole, it appears to me that the standpoint which you have taken is that of Bhedá-bheda which also Chaitanya adopted. I have just studied Sankara's commentaries on the Gitá and Mándukya and am filled with wonder at the extent of his thought which comes out more clear and prominent than in the Vedanta Sutra alone."

8. Dr. P. K. Roy, D.Sc. (London and Edinburgh), late Professor and Principal, Presidency College, Calcutta—

"..... The Preface is well conceived as well as well written, and the book bears evidence of your labour and thought to give correct interpretations and to remove misinterpretations in all disputed and difficult points. You have done a very great service to the cause of the true Religion of the Hindus by publishing this English version. I hope it will have an extensive circulation not only in India but also in England, Germany and America In my old age there cannot be a greater joy than in witnessing the success of my old pupil and his devotion to the subject of my devotion."

9. Professor S. Radhakrishnan, King George V Professor of Philosophy, University of Calcutta—

"I thank you for your valuable gift of Adwaita Philosophy, which I read with the greatest interest. As you may imagine, I appreciate very much your strenuous attempt to repudiate the popular view of the world-negating character of Sankara's Philosophy. Though your representation of the Adwaita Vedants brings it very near Rámánuja's view, you have made out a very strong case for it. What struck me most in your book, apart from its wealth of learning, was your independence of mind which is rather rare among Indian thinkers of the present day."

- 10. Sir George A. Grierson, K.C.I.E., Ph.D., D.Litt., LL.D.—late Vice-President, Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland—
- "...... I have read a good deal of it and found it very interesting and instructive...... your book shows evidence of much original research, and I hope that you will continue your studies of this and other important Systems of Indian Philosophy."
- 11. Professor M. Winternitz, Ph.D.,—University of Prague, Czecho-Slovakia—
- "..... It seems to me to be an excellent Introduction to the system of Sankara in its different aspects. As I am specially interested in the Ethics of the Indian systems, I have read the IVth Chapter on the 'Place of Ethics and Religion in Vedanta' more attentively. You have very well shown that for the Adwaita, altruistic Karma is required as a means for purification of mind, and that Sankara endeavours to harmonize कम्बीक। एड and जानकारह. I am not sure that this subordination of moral action to sign is the best way to strengthen social and ethical feelings in the masses and in mankind generally. But there is something in the idea of Adwaita which seems to me of high ethical value—the idea of unity of all that is, which may lead to the idea that there is no difference between my own self and that of my neighbour, whence there is no reason why I should care more for myself than for another. This has well come out in Mahayana Buddhism-in my opinion under the influence of VedantaYour book, as you see from my remarks, is very suggestive."
- 12. Dr. L. D. Barnett—Oriental Studies, London Institution (University of London).
 - "..... Your book is a work of considerable merit."
 - 13. Professor J. Wackernagel, Basil, Switzerland-
- "...... 'Introduction to Adwaita Philosophy ' is a valuable book! shall not fail to make it known and accessible to fellow-workers interested in Indian Philosophy, and hope it will be appreciated universally according to its merits."
- 14. Professor Hermann Jacobi, Ph.D.—University of Bonn, Germany—
- "..... A look into the book convinced me that it is a work of much thought and deep reasoning. I determined, instead of simply acknowledging it with some complimentary remarks to regularly study it. I am reading your book now and hope to write you at more length....... I have read this novel exposition of Sankara's system with interest and profit, whether one entirely agrees with the author's theory or not, one will admire his ingenuity and be grateful for many valuable suggestions..... It is an admirable book...... I have the highest esteem for you personally." (The learned Professor writes here a long criticism mainly on the Unreality of God and the World. This has been printed separately and incorporated in the second edition.)

- 15. Rev. W. S. Urquhart, M.A., Ph.D.—Principal, Scottish Churches College, and Fellow of the Calcutta University—
- ".....It is an exceedingly useful treatment of the subject from your point of view and will, no doubt, have the effect of removing certain misunderstandings and reconciling contradictions which are a puzzle to many students of Sankara's Philosophy. But it seems to me that in some cases you have transferred your allegiance from Sankara to Rámánuja. For, is it that there is no fundamental difference between them?"
- 16. Professor W. Caland, M.A., Ph.D., University of Utrecht, Holland—
- "...... 1 can assure you that I have read your very clear exposition of the Adwaita Philosophy with profit."
- 17. Professor Richard Schmidt, Ph.D.—University of Munster, Germany—
- "...... I do not hesitate to furnish you with the expression of my warmest appreciation of your work on Adwaita Philosophy. I am not able, it is true, to say whether or not the great commentator and philosopher Sankara will satisfy to modern Indian or European aims, but surely your book is an admirably suitable introduction to that most magnificent achievement of Indian thought, the knowledge of which will be very useful to all those students and general readers who are interested not only in the system of Adwaita, but in the evolution of human mind generally spoken. From this point of view, your book is not only a highly interesting contribution to the interpretation of Sankara's writings, but also in every way a new argument of the justness of the "Ex Orienti lux." I therefore wish you best success.—

" मभिवर्षति योऽतुपालयन्, विधिवीजानि विवेकवारिया। स सदा फलगालियौं क्रियां, गरदंलीकहवाधितिष्ठति॥"

- 18. Professor Otto Jesperson, M.A., Ph.D., University of Copenhagen, Denmark—
- "Allow me to thank you most cordially for your extreme kindness in sending me your valuable "Introduction to Adwaita Philosophy." I am not an expert in Indian Philosophy, but I have seen enough of your book to say that it is a most painstaking and thorough work which I very greatly appreciate....."
- 19. Professor Alfred Hillebrandt, M.A., Ph.D., University of Breslau, Germany—
- "I beg to express my best thanks for your very interesting— Introduction to Adwaita Philosophy.' A temporary disease of eyes prevented me from answering sooner and congratulating you on this elucidation of the views of the great champion and interpreter of the Vedanta—Sankara......It is obvious that your work marks a great progress by the brilliant exposition which Sankara's views have found therein, by your painstaking labour and judicious treatment. Every one, who will make himself acquainted with his philosophy and has no time to go through all his various works, finds now the way opened and will be indebted to you for this masterly introduction.

...... I fully appreciate the value of your scholarly work which I think a perfect success. Allow me to repeat my opinion that your work represents a high standard of Indian scholarship."

20. Professor Dr. L. Stcherbatsky, University of Leningrad, Russia—

"I have received your valuable book about Adwaita. Please accept my greatest thanks. I am full of admiration for your wonderful knowledge of Sankara, and have profited a great deal from its perusalThe attacks on Sankara from the stand-point of Christian missionaries are never regarded very much, it is biassed and official stand-point......In reading your book I got the impression that you wish to protect Sankara against aggressors who are much below him......."

21. Professor James H. Woods, Ph.D., University of Harvard, America—

"Your book on the Vedanta has given me the greatest pleasure. It is coherently written and the arguments move forward with logical precision and at the same time keep close to the text of the Vedanta. I found the book extremely valuable and I hope it will be the first one of a series. Your work has impressed me so much that I am sending you an invitation......."

22. Professor Richard Garbe, Ph.D., University of Tubingen, Germany-

"I thank you much for your valuable work—' An Introduction to Adwaita Philosophy.' It is more than the title indicates: not only an able introduction, but a very important contribution to the history of Indian Philosophy. Especially Chapter III—' On the falsity of the world' with its sharp distinctions seems to me to be of particular importance, as, according to it, the current notions about Sankara's conception of the world have to be corrected. Inaccuracies in the transliteration of Sanskrit words may easily be removed in a second edition of your book which I hope will be necessary in a short time...... I have always been a stern and modest worker in the field of Indian philosophy and philology, but I am glad to find that my endeavours are acknowledged in the land of my studies. I wish you all success which your learning and diligence deserve."

23. M. E. Senart, Esq., Ph.D., of Paris-

"...... I have indeed read enough of your book to value your thorough knowledge of Sankara's writings and your ingenuous industry in bringing together scattered utterings of his doctrines and presenting them in clear translations. Of course we cannot forget that the illustrious thinker has expressed his ideas in the garb of commentaries to many works which, although different in age and origin and diversely influenced, in our opinion, by independent speculations, are nevertheless all considered by him as equally authoritative. So appear several of his discussions less a spontaneous expression of his doctrine than a secondary adaptation to it through subtle commentations, of tenets originally derived from other currents of thought. Anyhow, your deep justice to the old master—Sankara—and your remarkable command of the difficult literary materials cannot but meet the grateful acknowledgment of all interested in this line of research."

24. Professor Maurice Bloomfield, John Hopkins University, America—

"...... you must not think of me at all disregarding your kind letters, you must do so least of all as regards your valuable book on Sankara's Adwaita. I have had time to read it, but not enough time to comment upon it in print. I am glad to say to you that your book is, I am convinced, a most valuable contribution to our knowledge of India's high thought; your exposition of Sankara is that of a loving disciple, but, at the same time, critical as well as sympathetic. Your Chapter on Máyá is especially illuminating, but I remember every page of the book as full of clarifying information. No Indologist can possibly read it without being grateful to you for your first-hand, trustworthy help in this difficult field—a field which shows Hindu thought on its very pinnacle. I hope that you will continue to send me your valuable writings. Even if I should not find occasion to review them formally, I shall without doubt sooner or later refer to them in print."

28. Dr. Sylvain Levi, Ph.D., Professor, College de France, Paris—

safe and wise to exclude from your expositions any other source than Sankara himself;—here we have him genuine, telling his own tale in his own words, not having to carry on his powerful shoulders the burden of another's responsibility. I hope you will publish some more essays of the same value."

- 26. Professor Carlo Formichi, M.A., Ph.D., University of Rome. Italy—
- "...... I thank you most sincerely for the very valuable gift of your book on Adwaita Philosophy. I myself shall review it in one of the next numbers of our journal. In the meantime, I congratulate you on your excellent work, the offspring both of knowledge and of love."

27. Dr. G. Tucci, University of Rome-

"...... I know you are the author of a very interesting book on the Adwaita Philosophy, which competent scholars have judged the best exposition we have of Sankara school. As particularly interested in Indian philosophical thought, and Director of "Studi E. Materiali de Storia Delle Religion" and Colabourator for Indian section of the "Recista Dept.—Study Oriental" edited by the professors of the University of Rome, I shall be very grateful to you, if you would be so kind as to send me a copy of your book. I shall be very glad to publish a review of it in our journals so that it will be presented to our public."

28. The Honourable Dr. Justice W. Ewart Greaves, Kt.—Vice-Chancellor, Calcutta University—

"As Europe is proud of Kant, so is India proud of Sankara—the have received such high praise from Dr. Keith of Edinburgh University, and this University is proud of the honour which comes to it from your association with it........I am sure Sir Asutosh, had he been alive, would have been proud of your work."

29. The Prager Presse (A German Periodical), No. 169-July, 1925.

"As Europe is proud of Kant, so is India proud of Sankara—the great teacher and philosopher of the end of the 8th and the beginning of the 9th Century. There appears every year a good number of books which represents and expounds the philosophy of Sankara. One of the most important of such publications is "An Introduction to Adwaita Philosophy" by Kokileswar Sastri that appeared in Calcutta last year. This Introduction distinguishes itself from the average publications of its kind in a considerable measure. The author is conversant with all the minutest details of the subject, interprets it correctly and intelligently in a scientific method; and his book is therefore a valuable contribution towards the right understanding of India's national philosophy. One of the great merits of the book is the clearness of the representations and the synoptical arrangement of Sankara's philosophy. The doctrine most well-known in Europe is that the world is an illusion (Máyá); the only true reality belongs to the Divine Brahman that is one without a second (Adwaitam). The world is really nothing but one of the many-sided manifestations of Brahman, of his creative, unending and inexhaustible power. Upon this preliminary presumption, it goes on to explain all phenomena, the individuality and activity of man and the ethical character of this religious-philosophical doctrine. As regards the last point, Sastri's book is particularly a beautiful addition to Sankara-literature. According to Vedanta, our Karman ties us to this world. As the only safe resort of the individual components or phases of Brahman consists in recognising the fact that man is not distinguished from Brahman, but is a means of the realisation of Brahman;—the last goal of the individual is to tear asunder the chains that bind us to this painful world. This would mean a reduction of the works of man and would make his life a fruitless waste. Kokileswar Sastri shows that that is not the case, and that Sankara's philosophy even provides for man a full field for his moral activity. It is desirable that this book would be frequently read in Europe, because it corrects many familiar notions and gives rise to discussions." (Translated from original German.)

30. The Indian Review (of Madras), May, 1925-

"The Adwaita Philosophy as propounded by the great Sankara, was a most magnificent achievement of Indian thought, and any work aiming to simplify and popularise that difficult system of Philosophy, should meet with public favour. The present work under review is an able treatise in that direction, and the learned author has endeavoured to furnish the student and the general reader with the right views about the teachings of Sankara on each of the topics treated therein. No pains have been spared to make the work a suitable introduction to the study of Vedanta, and the subject-matter has been arranged in such a way as to make the book an indispensable companion for any full understanding of Sankara's position. It presents also to beginners an opportunity of making themselves acquainted with antagonistic views on various points and supplies them with materials to combat those views. The book is wholly expository and contains the teachings of Sankara in a simple language."

31. The Calcutta Review, July, 1925-

"Some of the publications of the Calcutta University have by their real worth and originality shed a lustre on the scholars who have undertaken research work as one of the important activities of an up-to-date University.

This brilliant expositions by Pandit Kokileswar Sastra, M.A., of one of the most abstruce systems of Indian philosophy and abstract speculation presenting even to trained minds extraordinary difficulty in rightly interpreting the precise position taken by Sankara, India's greatest thinker, bids fair to hold a prominent place among those scholarly productions of the premier University of India.

Pandit Kokileswar Sastri is already known among the savants of the East and the West and we are glad to see that he has well maintained the high tradition of scholarship for which his family is famous in Bengal.

It is not possible to overestimate the value of a book like this to the students of Philosophy who will surely find much help in properly appreciating Sankara's true philosophical position in Pandit Sastri's exposition and interpretation so thorough, lucid and elaborate, and in his method, as scientific.

The quotations of text and citations from commentaries are so generously extensive that the book will serve to many busy scholars as a storehouse of ready reference. Another merit of the book is due to the author's extraordinary power of co-ordinating the individual scattered passages found in Sankara's voluminous works (especially his extensive Commentaries) with the masterly ease of a real scholar. One, perhaps, may just wish that more reference had been made to treatises like Aparokshánubhuti, Vivekachudámani, Adwaitakaustubham, Vedanta-muktabali and Vivekádarsha.

Another distinct advantage is that the author is deeply versed in both Eastern and Western philosophical lore. This knowledge has stood him in good stead in the elucidation in Western terminology or in terms of modern philosophical ideas of many an abstruse point of the Sankara-school of Vedantism and some of the baffling technical expressions used in his various Commentaries.

The ably written preface throws light on a number of controversial points besides precisely indicating the scope of the volume. Rightly does it claim that "an endeavour has been made to discover the real teaching of Sankara," though the author's innate modesty leads him to describe his work as only a "suitable introduction to the proper study of the originals." Happily, he does not permit this modesty to interfere with the strong conviction with which he has put forward his new interpretation and defence of Sankara without any halting hesitancy in the face of the formidable body of very adverse criticism made by Western writers some of whom make up the deficiency of their qualification as competent judges by their reckless audacity.

We do not pretend to attempt within our space limit anything like a detailed criticism of the volume before us and have to rest content for the present with a rapid survey of the work divided (as it is) into only four well-defined and comprehensive chapters.

The first chapter "On Brahma as Creator" tackles very ably the much-vexed problem of the true relation between Brahma and Iswara and attempts to present in a clear and undisputed light the character of Sankara's theory of causality (I, Sec. 6) and corrects the view that in Sankara's system finite individuals have been divested of their "personality" and therefore of "responsibility" for their acts. It shows that according to Sankara, Brahma is not an abstract Intelligence but a self-conscious Knower and a Directive or Purposive Power whose purpose in the creation of the universe is the complete realisation of the Atma as the final end or realisation of the Infinite in the finite (viz., in human beings and the world—i.e., in man and nature), Brahma itself being the highest purpose or end. It also establishes that Sankara's theory of causality involves his attitude of opposition to Pantheism by means of his emphatic recognition of Individuality or responsible Personality and by reason of the special stress laid on the idea of the "nature" of Brahma (his say or saying and on the distinction between Hither and faging (pp. 34-35).

The second chapter deals with the important question of the distinction in Sankara's system between the real and the empirical self and establishes the truth that Pure Ego is an active power, the agent and source of all activities and not merely a being or knowledge. Practically a good part of this chapter is devoted to the refutation beyond all legitimate controversy of the erroneous charge of Pantheism levelled against him.

The empirical self in which human nature and its elements are manifested has its temporal importance and instrumental value only as a means or medium for the realisation of the true end of the real self. Such is also the value (as means) of the external world and its manifold changes and varied manifestations.

Avidya (which, by the way, is explained after Sankars on pp. 108-109) is responsible for the identification of the empirical with the true self. The activities of the empirical self are determined mechanically in an unbroken time-series; free activity—eternal, changeless, independent of the influence of the external world—being the quality only of the true self. The activities of the and and the human self are both called the End; yet the idea of the final realisation of the supreme End transcends the sphere of Nature and its elements. This is the goal to which the whole creation moves.

In this important chapter the author repeatedly emphasises the absolute need of carefully bearing in mind that the individual (like Brahma) has a distinct "nature" of his own—his set or sense or sense or which is permanent (first) and which ever maintains its "unity" amidst all diversities and equally preserves its identity in the midst of the phenomenal changes which this sense underlies and which are transient and impermanent (pp. 55-56 and 66-68).

The conclusion arrived at (p. 64) is that to Sankara the real character of the Pure Ego is not merely a being or a knowledge but an active power and a source of activities (सामध्ये) which, again, can never be reduced to or resolved into its manifested activities (i.e., into pantheism).

In the third chapter the principle of causality (सत्कार्थवाद) 18 thoroughly investigated (pp. 98-101) with a view to particularly refute the erroneous charge of pantheism brought so often against Sankara's Adwaita philosophy and as a result it shows the true significance of the idea of the falsity of the world. The conclusion here reached (pp. 103-104 and p. 113) is that the world of phenomenal changes is the manifestation of the "NATURE" (स्वद्) of the self which changes serve to gradually reveal this zau, but when these changes (called the many) are erroneously separated (as something independent) from Brahma (the One), then and only then, they become unreal or false (vide, pp. 103-104, 113 and 121). In Sankara's languagewented. If Brahma is erroneously resolved into the world and the two are made identical, the world becomes unreal or false. The correct interpretation of Sankara is that Brahma realises itself in the form of the world which is never identical with Brahma but must be "taken as the means through which the 'nature' (and) of Brahma is ever being realised in a higher and higher form." "The world cannot be looked upon as unreal or false "as such (p. 107). There is a further elaboration of this conclusion in the re-statement of Sankara's exact position regarding the falsity or otherwise of the world on pp. 122-125.

The exposition given by the author and the interpretation adopted, by him are represented as logically resulting from a correct appreciation of the Vedantic theory of causality as also of Sankara's vigorous refutation of Pantheism (vide pp. 98-101 and footnote to p. 102). The puzzling technical term wave explained by the Tiká-Kára in his way (p. 101), and rendered by Western scholars as "identical" has been cought to be properly explained by our author at some length on pages 25, 26, 52, 72, 83, 100 and 109.

The end systematically kept in view in these three chapters which practically constitute the book itself is to remove the misconceptions formed regarding Sankara's position and his Adwaitabad by the West since Hegel's time who started this wrong interpretation by assuming without sufficient first-hand knowledge that Brahma in the Vedanta system is no better than an empty abstraction without purpose and without activity—a sort of negative infinitude. Later Western critics have repeated this criticism with individual variations. The function of "Maya" has also been much misunderstood and the result is that the empirical self in its relation to the real Self has been presented in a wrong light. Pantheism has, therefore, also been wrongly fastened upon the Adwaita philosophy on the basis of a wrong interpretation of the true significance of the well-known Vedantic formula of Twattam-asi

The fourth chapter has been added evidently to emphasise the value of the practical aspect or side of the Vedanta which is often considered by these Western critics as a mere speculation. The last chapter (Chap. IV) starts with a statement of all the serious allegations made against the Indian theism based on the Vedanta and its ideal of salvation (and) on the assumption that the Vedantic system is "opposed to ethical theism and religion." The author's aim, as he avers, is to "cautiously examine the validity of the assertions" so made (vide pp. 126-128). Incidentally there is a summary of Sankara's views on the Hindu socio-religious organisation and finally follows an explanation of a large number of perplexing "anomalous passages" scattered here and there in the various commentaries of Sankara that are likely to "cause confusion" especially to those who are not to the manner born. The elaborate enumeration of the ethical virtues and their classification (pp. 166 et seq.) in sec. 10 of the chapter will also serve a very useful purpose.

The investigation here begins with an analysis of the psychological disposition (जैब्सकात) with which man is born and which determines his nature or empirical character (इस्ताव) and actions and to which is due his love for agreeable and aversion to disagreeable objects राज्या: Sankara calls this empirical self no real self at all (युन्तावम), the true self being a self-determining End-in-itself guided by the rational regulator as a free agent of all purposive activities (called द्वा).

The aim of man's life is not merely to attain pleasure and avoid pain—his supreme end (एइसप्रवार्थ) is bliss (निःश्रेयस्) through realisation of Brahma (ज्ञाविद्या) (cf. Kathabháshya, II. 2. 5).

There is an eternal conflict between enlightenment and impulsive activities and the soul's emancipation is achieved by true knowledge of Brahma

Sankara does not demand renunciation of all activities but he insists on their proper regulation in order to secure the realisation of the highest self through purification of the mind (and body) (i.e., around), by means of well-regulated Karma, from selfish desires and impulsive proclivities, passions and inclination to self-gratification. Even if good work is done as an end in itself it proves to be a bondage—good work must be done as a means of spiritual regeneration (विद्योत्पत्तो). Thus "ethical or moral progress" in Sankara's system "points to a transcendental goal" (p. 161).

'' चयमाता सब्बेली विक-प्रियेश्यः प्रियतमी भवति '' 💌 🔻 '' चारमतस्वमैव

Sankara definitely and positively avers that man is a free agent (p. 155) and the Sastric injunctions (whether as prescriptions of duties or prohibitions) are not, therefore, a mandate from the outside imposed on man—the Sastras only indicating the course of action to be adopted (vide footnote to p. 155). According to the present author's interpretation, Sankara does not consider Janaa and Karma as antagonistic (pp. 172-173), for he has attempted a reconciliation of Karmakánda with Janakánda and Karma is needless only in the case of those who have realised Brahma— মামাবিত্ত:

Finally, Sankara's position with regard to Adwaita or Aveda (i.e., extirpation of the notion of difference and separateness between Brahma and the empirical world of नामरा is that the idea of such difference (भेरबुद्धि) is the work of Avidya which is destroyed by the idea of taking all emergent activities as higher and higher expressions of the Divine Purpose (सुद्धि।समाव) which supplants the sense of separateness (भूगारावीध). This सुद्धि।समाव leads to emancipation (सुद्धि।) which, again, is not absorption of the Ego in Brahma (pp. 182-184).

By way of general criticism we may say that the author has rightly started his whole investigation with an enquiry about the real significance of Prana-spandan which forms the subject-matter of the fourth section of the second chapter of Vedantadarsanam and is also referred to in I. 1. 23, 28-31 and which is considered in Sankara's system to be the primal and earliest manifestation of Brahma's nature-Brahma being yiwa yiw: -viz., that which differentiates itself as the phenomena of the world (cf. Chandyogya and Isha Bhashya). Section 4 of Chapter I contains an original interpretative contribution to the discussion of the true nature of Brahma often misunderstood and represented as "pure undifferenced being." In that view, Brahma is not regarded in both the transcendental and immanental aspects which, again, are inseparable. Here the author has very rightly and properly laid great stress on Brahma's underlying nature (स्वरूप). Sections 1 and 2 of Chapter III are equally important in this respect with regard to the much-vexed question which has long baffled and often misled Western critics as to Sankara's true attitude towards the empirical world.

Even when we fail to see eye to eye with our author's interpretation, supported though it is by closely-reasoned arguments and extensive quotations, we have to admit that he has for the first time cleared the atmosphere to enable an open mind to distinctly discern how Sankara has been misunderstood and misinterpreted by his Western critics. The author's own view regarding the right interpretation of Sankara has nothing hazy or equivocal and there is no halting state ment, no vacillation, no lurking doubt anywhere in his mind as to the correctness of this interpretation made in the light of Sankara's own utterances combined together from a very large number of Sankara's commentaries.

In section 3 of this Chapter (vide page 101 et seq. and also pp. 21-23) we have a convincing restatement of the salient points in Sankara's powerful criticism of the purely Pantheistic position wrongly ascribed by Western writers to Sankara but really held by one of his opponents—the Vrittikára (vide pp. 75-76, 78-80, 82-83). Yet candour leads the author to admit there is some reason for the misinterpretation to which Sankara has made himself liable. The grounds of this misapprehension are next sought to be removed.

Now, the real trouble is that Hindu metaphysical concepts can hardly be appropriately and accurately rendered into the alien form of Western terminology, because the very back-ground of thought-movement is so fundamentally different in the two philosophical cultures even when both of them happen to be monistic or transcendental. Pandit Kokileswar Sastri possesses, as we have stated, a special qualification through his mastery of Eastern and Western philosophy.

In the discussion of 'Ethics and Religion in Vedanta' (Ch. IV) the author has, however, relied more on Sankara's Geetá-bháshyam than his Vedanta-bhashyam especially in the attempt to prove his thesis regarding the precise place assigned in the Sankara system to what are known as ethical virtues. The problem of ethics does not, in fact, form an integral part of the Vedanta at any rate in the same definite and categorical form as in the Bhagabatgeetá, even though some of the Upanishads on which the Brahma-sutra is particularly based are made at all events by Sankara's Commentaries on them and his method of interpretation to lend a strong support to the exposition of this problem which the present author too successfully endeavours to expound in this "Adwaita Philosophy."

One naturally expects that a University publication should be free from printing mistakes. We have unfortunately noticed too large a lot of them to be mentioned. There are a few other mistakes too but we have preferred to point them out to the author for necessary correction in a second edition of the book which, considering its importance and worth, may reasonably be looked for within a short time.

The busy reader may object that the book is full of repetitions which may appear to be tiresome, but it should be remembered that the book is an attempt to refute the interpretation authoritatively given to Sankara's system by a number of distinguished Western scholars of great repute who so justly carry so much weight and hence the present writer may have felt, we presume, the need of making his own stand-point and exposition as elaborate and convincing as possible. There is an apology for his method implied in the author's remarks in section 5, page 118, paragraph 1."
